who say that they saw a beacon at a place where no beacon has been seen by anybody else, and we have against that the fact that a beacon has always existed at the other corner. After Christoffel's death his widow took possession of his share of Kriegerspoort, and she immediately transferred it to her minor son, as she was about to enter into a second marriage with one Du Plessis. She was married out of community to Du Plessis, and consequently by the marriage Du Plessis took no interest in the farm itself, or in the life interest in the farm which his wife had reserved to herself, and, therefore, it is quite fair to contend that Du Plessis was not in the position of a person who can bind the owners of the farm; but his conduct is important, as showing what the persons who were interested at that time considered to be the true beacon line. While the property was still in the hands of the son, the line now claimed by the defendant was fenced some 12 or 13 years ago, and Du Plessis actually paid half the cost of fencing that land. The line now claimed by the defendant had been fenced when the plaintiff bought in 1900, and it has continued so fenced ever since. After briefly sketching the principal points in favour of the contentions of the respective parties, His Lordship added: I do not decide this case altogether on the question of prescription, although I think on the question of prescription a strong case has been made out. I may say that the evidence of long user and occupation is so strong as to show that there is no reason why the past occupation should be interfered with. I, therefore, on the whole case, hold that the defendant has succeeded in this matter, and judgment will be given in his favour, with costs, and on his claim in reconvention I declare the boundary line, A D C, shown on Surveyor Murray's plan marked "a," and dated May, 1905, to be the true boundary line between the farms.

On Mr. McGregor's application, defendant was granted his expenses as a necessary witness.

HAYES V. RHODDIE. { 1905.
Oct. 24th.

[This case not having been concluded at the time of going to press, the report is necessarily held over.]—S.H.R.

JUTA AND CO. V. DRUMMOND.

Mr. Jones moved, as a matter of urgency, on behalf of Messrs. J. C. Juta and Co., for leave to attach the proceeds of a certain judgment of the Supreme Court given in favour of Hil-yard Home Drummond.

The applicant's affidavit stated that the defendant owed him £40 16s. 6d., and that the defendant had been granted £80 damages against one Percy Baily during the week, and the present application was to attach the amount owing from the damages awarded.

Hopley, J., said one of the exhibits of the case was an assignment of any judgment received to his attorney for value received. It was a very peculiar assignment.

Mr. Jones: It is peculiar, when he cannot pay his just debts.

A rule nisi calling on Baily and his law agent and Drummond to show cause why the amount should not be attached was granted, the return day being fixed for November 2.

Postea (November 2nd).

Mr. P. S. T. Jones for applicants; the respondent Drummond appeared in person.

Dr. Greer (for Bailey) said that he appeared merely to submit to any judgment that the Court might give.

Mr. P. Jones read an affidavit by the petitioners, in which they said that they had obtained judgment for £46 against respondent in the R.M.'s Court at Wynberg.

Respondent read an answering affidavit, in which he set forth his position at considerable length. He declared that petitioners had promised to renew a certain promissory note.

Mr. Jones read a replying affidavit by the petitioners.

Respondent said that there were only two courses open to him to carry forward the actions which he had against Bailey and Wood. He had either not to meet these accounts, or he had to sue in forma pauperis. Respondent proceeded to argue the question of whether he could have assigned his rights in regard to certain actions to his attorney, and cited certain English cases. He said that he had had actions against others in the Supreme Court, but in the meantime his creditors had sued him in the Magistrate's Court. Hence his present financial difficulties.

Without calling upon Mr. Jones.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the rule would be made absolute, and the property declared executable to the judgment obtained in the Magistrate's Court by applicants against respondents. Costs were allowed to Bailey and Jones.

BOSWARVA V. PALMER. { 1905.
Oct. 24th.
" 25th.

Commission—Conditional promise to pay.

This was an action brought by Charles John Boswarva, who resides at Observatory-road, against Charles Thomas Palmer to recover £100, amount due on a written undertaking.

The plaintiff's declaration stated that in April, 1903, the defendant agreed to pay to plaintiff £100, if he (plaintiff) could arrange for the sale of certain premises to defendant, occupied by one MacLeod, for £4,000, and arrange for a bond to be passed on the property for £3,500. The defendant then became liable to plaintiff for £100, and, not having it then, gave a written undertaking to pay it within six months, which he had not done.

The defendant's plea alleged that plaintiff was acting as agent for MacLeod, and effected the sale of the property to defendant, for which service he received £100 from MacLeod. He denied that he agreed to give plaintiff £100. He admitted that he promised plaintiff £100 if he could effect a bond for £3,500, but he denied that plaintiff had done so.

The replication denied that plaintiff was engaged by MacLeod, but admitted that he received £100 from MacLeod.

Mr. Searle (with him Dr. Greer) was for plaintiff; Mr. W. P. Buchanan (with him Mr. Jones) was for defendant.

The plaintiff stated he was a builder and contractor and speculator. In April, 1903, the defendant approached him, and asked him to purchase MacLeod's property for him for £4,000. He told him that he had only £700 cash, and that it would be necessary to arrange for a bond of £3,500, and told witness that if he could raise it he would pay him £100. Witness succeeded in getting MacLeod to sell the property for £4,000, and also arranged the bond for £3,500. MacLeod promised witness £100, provided he could get the sale fixed up within a fortnight. He did so, and got the £100. As the defendant did not arrange about the bond in time, the arrangements fell through, and defendant at witness's suggestion took a partner into the property. Witness arranged a bond later on for £2,400. Witness then asked for his £100, and defendant informed him that he was hard pushed for money, and told witness he would pay him later on. Witness went on a trip for six months, and returned for six weeks, during which time he again asked for the money. Witness again went away for six months, and on his return heard that defendant had got an inheritance. He again applied for the money, but, receiving no reply, put the matter in the hands of his solicitor. Van Reenan (defendant's partner) told witness that he had nothing to do with the promissory note.

Cross-examined: MacLeod did not give the £100 as brokerage; he gave it as a present. Witness denied that he showed defendant his property, and suggested his buying it. Witness told defendant that MacLeod had promised him £100. All was put down in black and white. "They" were to get 2½ per cent. for raising the money and stamps, etc.—the usual thing.

Mr. Buchanan: And what were you to get your 2½ per cent. for?

Witness: For introducing them to the firm.

Mr. Buchanan: So you were to get £100 for taking him to see your conveyancer, and saying here is a man who wants so and so?

Proceeding, witness said that he had had nothing to do with raising the mortgage. He had not known that Mr. Hofmeyr valued the whole property at £3,700, and that only a portion of the land had been sold to Palmer for £4,000. The bond was "fixed up" before Palmer signed the deeds.

[Hopley, J.: Are you disputing that they agreed to lend the money?]

Yes, they were never satisfied with the security.

[Hopley, J.: And that part of the work for which he claimed £100 was never done]

That is my contention.

Witness (continuing) said he would be greatly surprised to hear that when witness was trying to get the loan of £3,500, Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller were trying to get a bond of £2,450. Witness knew nothing of Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller's endeavours to get the bond. Witness denied that he told Palmer he could get money when others could not.

Mr. Buchanan: You were confident you could get it?—I was confident when Mr. Partridge told me he had it.

You are a business man, and you know that people could not get the full value of a place as a mortgage?—Money was very plentiful then.

[Hopley, J.: Do you mean to say that people would advance 35-37ths of the money?]

I know many instances, my lord.

Mr. Buchanan: How is it you took so long to bring this action?—I was away for twelve months.

How long has Partridge gone?—I cannot say.

[Hopley, J.: Is this Partridge the man about whom one sometimes reads in the newspapers of his disappearance?]

Witness: Yes, my lord.

Mr. Buchanan: Isn't it because Partridge has disappeared that you bring this action?

Witness: If Partridge was here, there would be no action.

Mr. Buchanan: That's what we say.

The witness added that after his return to Cape Town he heard that defendant had inherited £4,000, consequently he thought it time defendant paid up. Continuing, he said it was the intention that the £500 was to be paid on June 30, and as it was not forthcoming by July 14, the arrangements fell through.

Wasn't it on account of the absence of one of the partners in the property that the arrangements were delayed?—No. It was because the money was not forthcoming.

After that, didn't you suggest to him that he should take in Van Reenan?—No. I advised him to take in a partner. Continuing, witness said he did not know if Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller charged anything for preparing the loan.

Hector McLean MacLeod, shipwright, stated he was owner, in common with one Mr. Keswick, of the property which was the cause of the present dispute. The plaintiff had never acted in the matter for witness; he had gone to witness and informed him that he had a purchaser for the place at £4,000. Witness wanted £4,300, but consented to accept £4,000. Witness promised plaintiff £100 if he succeeded in selling the property. Witness mentioned the matter in a general way to Palmer.

In cross-examination, witness stated he purchased the property for £4,800 about twelve months before he sold to defendant. He kept a couple of blocks of land. Palmer asked witness for time to pay, and witness gave his assent.

Edgar Jones, attorney, of Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton, stated he conducted certain correspondence with Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller on behalf of Mr. MacLeod.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

For the defence,

Andrew Chatterton Fuller, of the firm of Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, stated that in April, 1903, Mr. Partridge was in their employ, and had charge of this case. Witness knew nothing of the present case, but put in the correspondence. If the papers for a loan were drawn up, and Palmer failed to avail himself of it, he would be charged with it. There was no charge recorded in the firm's accounts against him.

[Hopley, J.: What has become of Partridge?]

Witness: I do not know, my lord. He suddenly disappeared. We have heard that he was seen in London.

[Hopley, J.: Was there anything irregular about his books, papers, or money matters to account for it?]

Witness: Certainly nothing to cause his disappearance.

The witness (continuing) said Palmer was only charged the fees for arranging the loan.

In cross-examination, witness said the whole of the arrangements for this loan would have been put through without the firm being consulted. He wrote letters on behalf of the firm. The correspondence appeared to indicate that Partridge had made arrangements for the loan.

Witness, in re-examination, said he would not grant 35-37ths of the valuation of a property on first mortgage.

Johannes E. Neethling, of the firm of J. J. Hofmeyr and Sons, sworn appraiser, valued the property at £3,700. Boswarva called on witness, and accompanied him to Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne, and Lawton's office, where witness informed him that he was acting for Van Reenen. Witness had considerable experience of advancing money. It would have been impossible to get a £3,500 bond on the £3,700 valuation. After a conversation between Boswarva and Palmer, witness was instructed to send a cheque for £60, as commission for the loan.

In cross-examination, witness said he did not personally make the appraisal. At that time the money market was much easier than it was in August. People were lending their money very recklessly.

In reply to his lordship, the witness said the valuations at that time were greatly inflated.

In further cross-examination, witness admitted that his firm were looked upon as very cautious valuers. In September, witness's firm conducted a sale of stock for defendant. The net amount realised was £481 17s. At the time of the transfer, witness advanced the money, which the defendant subsequently repaid.

Charles Thomas Palmer, the defendant, stated he was now a farmer in Bechuanaland. In April, 1903, he was a cartage contractor at Observatory-road, and hired stables from a man named Hartley. Witness had to vacate these stables. Witness was approached by plaintiff, who showed him some of his own places. The property was purchased from McLeod on May 27. Witness signed an agreement to pay him £100 if he raised the money. Witness knew nothing about plaintiff getting £100 from McLeod at that time.

Plaintiff asked witness what amount he could pay down and he replied £500, without crippling his business. Witness went and saw McLeod on June 30, and McLeod asked to allow the matter to stand over pending the signing of the transfer by Keswick. Witness met the plaintiff on the Parade shortly after, and he told witness that the attorneys would not accept the money, as witness had been late in paying the £500. Witness and Van Reenen saw Boswarva later on, and told him that as he had failed to raise the loan the note was valueless.

In cross-examination, witness said he was not very anxious to get McLeod's place when he met Boswarva. Boswarva took witness to see Partridge on May 27. Boswarva told witness that he was not a broker.

A. G. van Reenen, butcher, Observatory, said he was part owner of the premises. In witness's presence Palmer told Boswarva that the matter of the commission had fallen through, as Boswarva had failed to raise the money.

Mr. Searle, having been heard in argument on the facts, his lordship, without calling on Mr. Buchanan, said he was not satisfied that the claim had been proved. It was quite clear that the plaintiff had done considerable work in bringing about this sale, but for those services he had been paid handsomely by Mr. McLeod. It appeared from the evidence that they had been to Partridge before the promissory note was signed, and he appeared to have given a loose promise to arrange a bond and that he would be prepared to advance £3,500, trust moneys. In consequence of what was then said and the arrangement with Partridge, the note was signed. It was therefore an agreement to pay £100 to plaintiff in connection with having rendered services for raising the bond. Now, the question which arose was, what did that document mean, and had any work been done by plaintiff in connection with it? It seemed to the Court that the document ought to mean: "If you succeed in raising £3,500, I will pay you £100." That would have been the ordinary commission, and a little more. It had been said that through the defendant's neglect of his obligations that it had not gone through. The Court did not agree with that. Before the Court could agree with the case made by the plaintiff, it would want him present to explain some of his letters. Instead of suing Palmer at once for the amount due, the plaintiff advised him to get in a partner, and then tried to include him in the liability on the note. Possibly, if Partridge had been present, and been cross-examined, he might have been able to throw considerable light on the case, but in the absence of such evidence, his lordship thought the proper judgment in the case was absolution from the instance, with costs, so that if at some future time plaintiff had any further evidence to bring forward he could still bring an action.

Mr. Buchanan inquired what was to be done with regard to the provisional sentence.

Hopley, J., said the defendant would get his money back, and would have to pay all costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

LEWIN AND ADAMSTEIN V. ESTERHUYSE. { 1905.
Oct. 25th.
" 26th.
" 27th.

This was an action brought by Messrs. Lewin and Adamstein to recover possession of portion of the farm Middleplaats, Laingsburg, from Willem S. Esterhuyse, and damages fixed at £100 for injury to the pasturage.

The plaintiffs' declaration stated that they had purchased the farm in question. Defendant had possession of a certain portion of the farm, which he refused to give up.

The defendant's plea stated that he obtained a ten years' lease of the portion of ground in question after the death of his uncle from his aunt, who was executrix in the estate, and had a usufruct interest in the farm, and that the plaintiffs were aware of the existence of this lease when they purchased the farm.

The plaintiffs denied that they knew of the existence of the lease, and added that, even if the aunt had given the lease, she could not grant it to operate after her death.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for plaintiffs, and Mr. Close (with him Mr. Roux) for defendant.

Mr. De Villiers submitted that the burden of proof was upon defendant.

Hopley, J., agreed.

The defendant stated that he lived on the farm Middleplaats, in Laingsburg. It formerly belonged to his uncle, W. J. Lourens, who died about ten years ago, and left a will, in which his wife was appointed executrix. She remained in possession of the farm. About ten years ago witness wanted a place to farm, and he stopped at this farm Middleplaats with his aunt. He arranged with her to get a part of the farm to cultivate, with the right to graze 50 head of cattle. For two years he was to get it for nothing and then he was to pay £7 per annum. His aunt's son knew of the agreement, and measured out the ground. Part of the ground was overgrown with mimosa bush, and he had improved the place very much, the value of the improvements being estimated at about £500. For two years he worked at the farm, and then there was a written agreement, which was handed to a Mr. Walters and lost. Under the contract, the original conditions were put in writing, and witness got the ground for ten years at £10 a year. He heard the auctioneer announce the existence of the lease in the presence of both plaintiffs when they purchased the farm.

He denied that he showed anybody the lost contract about four years ago. It was not correct to say that "Gouws" told him the contract was worthless. Witness denied that he asked "Gouws" to get the old lady to give him a new contract the day before the sale. The old contract was lost by a Mr. Walters. Witness could not state definitely when he gave it to him, but he took it to him to have some point explained. The declaration was signed on the morning of the sale. "Gouws" accompanied witness. If "Willem Baard" said that this was the first time he had seen the lease it would not be correct. Mr. De Wet would not be correct if he denied that in the conditions of sale mention was made of witness's lease.

Hendrik Thos. Greeff, farmer, stated his farm was near the defendant's. Witness was for some time partner with Mr. Walter. Witness was in the office when the search was made for the old lease. Willem "Zwaart Baard" and Gouws Esterheyse, called at the office for it. Witness was consulted about the stamps. Witness was at the auction when the conditions of sale were read, and the fact of the lease was mentioned.

Evidence was given by a local farmer, who attended the sale to purchase the farm, but owing to the many conditions he did not do so.

Johannes David van der Muller, a farmer, stated that in June, 1904, he hired from the plaintiffs the farm Middleplaats. The agreement was in writing, and was duplicated. Before the lease was signed there was some difficulty experienced about the two pieces of ground which were leased.

Further evidence of a corroborative nature having been heard, Mr. Close closed his case.

Solomon Lewin, one of the plaintiffs, stated he resided at Laingsburg. Witness and his partner went to the sale of the farm. They did not go specially to buy the place. Witness bid £3,200 or £3,400 for the whole farm. Piet Esterheyse might have been there, but witness did not see him. Witness stood about 30 yards away from the auctioneer.

[Hopley, J.: I suppose your business is to buy if you see a thing going cheap?]

I did not go there with the intention of buying. I know the reserve price, and I just bid up to £3,000 for it.

Mr. De Villiers: What was the highest bid?

£4,500 by a Mr. Woolfaardt.

[Hopley, J.: And what was the reserve?]

£6,000.

[Hopley, J.: If you had no intention of buying, why did you go there?]

Because I knew the people, and it was a nice drive.

The witness stated he could swear positively that he knew nothing about the ten years' lease. Witness entered into a lease the following day for the farm. Nothing was said about the ten years' lease at that time. Witness inquired if Piet Esterheyse and Wilmott, the holders of portion of the farm, were willing to give up their share. Witness asked what Willem Esterheyse was doing there, and the sons replied that he was doing nothing there, and could be kicked out at any time. The contract was signed, and witness let the farm to Van der Muller. When witness signed the contract to the latter, he did not know that anything was said about Willem Baard's holding. Witness did not read the contract, which was drafted by his agent. Witness intended having a dorp at Piet Esterheyse's farm. Witness could not exactly remember when he first heard of the ten years' lease, but he thought it was about three weeks after he took the farm over. Willem went up to witness, and said, "I hope you won't charge me too much for the farm." Witness told him to call and see him, but he never did so. In September, witness bought the farm for £4,000. Nothing was said about the ten years' lease. The sale and transfer were unconditional. Transfer was effected on January 14. After witness bought the farm he told defendant he had bought the farm, and asked him what was up that he did not go in to settle matters up. He said he had a contract, and at witness's request promised to show it to him, but he had not done so. Witness sold the farm to Mr. Solomon. They had not passed transfer, because Solomon refused to go in for the farm, because Willem was in possession. They were to get £5,500 for the farm.

[Hopley J.: You were to get £1,500 profit?]

Witness: I did a number of alterations to the farm.

Witness (continuing) said Solomon withdrew from the sale.

[Hopley, J.: I suppose you told Willem Baard that you would hold him liable if the contract was held good.]

Witness: Yes, my lord.

[Hopley, J.: I suppose you or your agent wrote to them and would hold them liable?]

I told his brother that I could not understand what was wrong with Willem.

Witness denied that he told Van Muller that he could not let him have Willem's portion of the farm. Witness wanted it for the purpose of levelling it off. If witness had had the farm they would have made money out of it. Defendant's brother, who was a sub-lessee, had been using the farm.

In cross-examination defendant said he had not thought of the dorp when he went to the sale. Witness did not believe Willem's contract was signed before the day witness leased the farm.

The place Willem now had was worth £50 a year to witness.

Supposing I came to hire the farm from you, what would you charge me? —I don't know.

He had not yet begun to level the ground of Willem Zwaart Baard. Witness asked several times for the contract, but he could not get it. Witness was plaintiff in the case of Lewin and Groeff, in which he claimed, in addition to the farm, another section on which a man named Marais was permitted to live. He never warned Marais to leave, and the Court held that he had not purchased the section.

Re-examined by Mr. De Villiers: If he ever told Willem Baard if he lost this case he would sue him, it must have come out by "mistake"; he never remembered saying it.

Jacob Adamstein, partner of the last witness, corroborated Lewin on everything that transpired when he was present.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: Witness had no intention of going up to £6,000, the reserve price on the farm. First of all, the auctioneer put up portion of the farm, and subsequently he offered the whole farm for sale. The conditions of sale were read, but witness did not hear the terms, and yet a bid was made for the farm. When they got the lease of the farm nothing was said of the old lease. He knew that Willem Zwaart Baard was on the farm, but he never told Baard to leave. He would not say that a respectable man like Van der Meulen would perjure himself, but he was trying to get it out of witness.

William Jacob Esterhuyse stated that under the will of his father the farm Middleplaats was bequeathed to him subject to a life interest to his mother. He disapproved of the lease given by his mother. That lease was only to last during her lifetime. While the auctioneer was reading out the conditions of sale, a dog fight took place, and it was difficult to hear.

Daniel Jacobus de Wet stated he was formerly an auctioneer at Laingsburg, and he put up the farm in question in April last year. He could not repeat the conditions of sale, which he might have destroyed when he left the office. He did not remember having mentioned that the farm was being sold subject to an existing lease to Esterhuyse. Witness took it to be a clean sale of the whole farm.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: He did not suggest that Esterhuyse asked him to come to the court to lie. The defendant said: "You are an Afrikaner, and you'll be on my side." He did not remember telling Nel that he read out the conditions of sale at the auction. He did not tell Jan Jacobs that he knew all about the lease on the day of the sale.

The next witness, Gordon, who read out the conditions of sale, said he did not remember reading anything about the ten years' lease.

Counsel for the plaintiffs having been heard on the facts,

Hopley, J., without calling on counsel for the defendant, gave judgment for the defendant, with costs. He believed that the document, which was drawn up about the ten years' lease, was intended to be used at the sale. His decision did not rest on the evidence of the defendant himself, but upon the probabilities of the case, and the direct evidence of other witnesses. The plaintiffs, he could not fancy, purchasing anything without knowing the conditions. The lease was a perfectly bona fide one, and he believed it was entered into for valuable consideration.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

SOUTH AFRICAN PRODUCE, { 1905
WINE AND BRANDY COM- { Oct. 26th.
PANY V. RILEY.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the discharge of a provisional order of sequestration and for the application for the appointment of a provisional trustee to be struck off.

Order granted as prayed.

HARE V. HARTUNG.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

MOUILLOT AND DE JONG V. KOENIG.
Sequestration, compulsory—Ord.
6 of 1843, Sec. 5.

A creditor cannot oppose the compulsory sequestration of the estate of an insolvent debtor on the grounds that he has no security for his debt, that he is willing to give time and that the time is inopportune for realizing the estate.

Mr. Burton moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), appeared for the defendant, and presented the petition of the Colonial Orphan Chamber and other creditors opposing the application.

Mr. Burton read the petition upon which the provisional order was granted, from which it appeared that there was a sum of £2,357 14s. 11d. due under a certain agreement, upon which judgment had been obtained. This judgment the debtor had been unable to satisfy. Goods of the value of £125 were pointed out to the Sheriff's officer but no other goods or chattels of the defendant were pointed out or afterwards found.

Mr. Schreiner, for the defendant, said that it was not denied that there had been an act of insolvency, but urged that it was not for the benefit of the creditors that the estate should be sequestrated. Counsel read a petition by the Colonial Orphan Chamber, the Surverlea Estate, and others, who said that they were unsecured creditors to the extent of £6,000 odd. Petitioners stated that the assets in the estate consisted only of landed property in Cape Town and Wynberg, which property was bonded to some of the petitioners, and in the present depressed state of the property market if sequestration was forced the property would be sacrificed.

Mr. Upington also read an affidavit by the defendant, Julius Koenig, merchant, Cape Town, in which he said that the petitioners claimed £1,650 under a partnership between Frank de Jong and Frederick Mouillot. Defendant entered in detail into his relations with the partnership, and with the Bank of Africa, who, he said, had brought about his present difficulties by discontinuing to finance him.

Mr. Burton read an answering affidavit by Mr. James Murray Wilson, who said that the applicants had received nothing on account of the partnership, and, as a matter of fact, had to meet liabilities of the partnership owing to the default of the respondent. He submitted that no ground had been shown by the other side why the provisional order of sequestration should not be made final. Counsel also read affidavits by Mr. Mullins, general manager of the Bank of Africa, who said that the bank repudiated the claim made by respondent, by Mr. W. A. Hofmeyr, of the firm of Messrs. Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset, applicant's attorneys; and by the Sheriff's officer, who went to Koenig's premises to levy execution.

Mr. Upington read a replying affidavit by the defendant.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said the applicant in this case was executor testamentary of the will of the late Frank de Jong, who obtained judgment against the defendant for £2,357, and a return of nulla bona was made. In so doing, the defendant committed an act of insolvency. The question before the Court was whether that should be made absolute or not. The opposition to making the rule absolute was made wholly on the allegation that it would not be to the benefit of the creditors to sequester the estate. The part of the ordinance on which the application was based gave the right to a creditor, who could not get his demand satisfied to place the estate under compulsory sequestration. A creditor applying for the compulsory sequestration of an estate must be able to show that the liabilities exceed the assets, and that the sequestration would be for the benefit of the estate. In the present case certain creditors had joined in the opposition to the sequestration, and the only grounds they could bring forward were that they were unsecured, and were willing to give time for the payment, and that owing to the state of the market the present was not a good time to realise the estate. No creditor was bound to give time. He was entitled to payment. His Lordship could not find any good grounds to base the refusal of the application on, and the judgment of the Court would be for the final adjudication of the estate, with costs.

STANDARD BANK V. HOTZ.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £3,578 10s. 5d., made by the defendant in favour of Israelsohn Bros., payable at the Standard Bank, Oudtshoorn, for value received, dated August 18, 1904, and payable six months after date. The summons, was for the balance of £3,758 10s. 5d., less £200 10s. 5d. paid on account.

The defendant's affidavit stated that he admitted that the signature to the promissory note was his, and that the said note had been reduced by payments amounting to £200 10s. 5d. Defendant went on to say that certain bills discounted by Israelsohn Bros. had been forged, and that he agreed with the bank manager at Oudtshoorn to retire the bills in order to prevent the arrest of and criminal proceedings against his brother-in-law, Meyer Israelsohn. He guaranteed an overdraft, and passed a promissory note for £3,578 10s. 5d., but said that the note was given to the plaintiff bank without consideration, or for immoral consideration. He also said that Meyer had been convicted of forgery at the Circuit Court on the 26th September.

The answering affidavit of Jacobus Johannes de Kock, now of Malmesbury, and formerly manager of the Standard Bank, Oudtshoorn, denied that he had promised not to prosecute Meyer Israelsohn. He said that the firm of Israelsohn Bros. were allowed a certain overdraft subject to a guarantee being provided. Mr. de Kock entered at some length into the whole matter of Meyer Israelsohn, and the bills alleged to have been forged by him and, as to defendant's association with the case, he said that he agreed to sign the promissory note and a guarantee for £890. During all the time there was not any question of compounding or compromising any crime.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C., and Mr. Upington) for defendant; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) for plaintiff.

Sir H. Juta submitted that this clearly was not a case for provisional sentence, but one in which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to go into the principal case, so that witnesses might be heard, and especially the evidence of Mr. De Kock, in view of the affidavit which he had filed in these proceedings. For practical purposes, the note and guarantee upon which the defendant was sued referred almost solely to the documents alleged to have been forged. The question to be determined by the Court was whether the note and the guarantee given in the month of August, 1904, were founded upon an improper and immoral consideration. Counsel submitted that a man who was in the position of Mr. De Kock, the manager of a branch in the country, who had made heavy advances to Israelsohn Bros., would move heaven and earth to do everything to put himself right with his general managers, and with the directors of the bank, in trying to retrieve the situation and getting money so that the indebtedness of Israelsohns might be paid. Mr. De Kock gave an explanation which was too ridiculous. He said that he told Israelsohns that he would sequester their estate. What was Hotz to get from this business? Why should he undertake this enormous liability if it were not to save his brother-in-law from being prosecuted? Quite naturally, when his brother-in-law was prosecuted, he refused to pay the promissory note. Counsel urged that the whole of the circumstances were consistent with the explanation given by the defendant as to how he came to pass the promissory note. Sir Henry cited the case of Harris v. Krige's Executors (2 Juta, 399).

Mr. Schreiner contended that this was eminently a case in which provisional sentence should be granted. It seemed to him that this was one of those cases in which a little knowledge was a dangerous thing. Mr. Wiggett, defendant's adviser, had had the case of Harris v. Krige's Executors in his mind. On the probabilities, the version of facts given by the defendant was not the correct one. A letter was written on February 3 by the defendant to the general manager of the bank in Cape Town, and it was incredible that if defendant had been induced by threats to act in the way he did, and by promises which had been broken, he should have written that letter when proceedings were pending. In that letter he said he was informed by the local branch manager that he was prepared to grant him (Mr. Hotz) an extension of time on his lodging security to the amount of £3,000, and passing a second mortgage. This he (defendant) was not prepared to do. He said that had he not come to the assistance of Israelsohn Bros., the bank would have lost considerably more than it had done. Having saved the bank a large amount, he thought that some consideration was due to him. Counsel asked whether that letter indicated the least objection on the part of the defendant towards the bank or the representative of the bank. He submitted that there was nothing whatever to show that the defendant was induced by the threat to pass the promissory note, except the improbable story given by the defendant himself. The whole case was one of vigilance by the local manager of the bank, and nothing more. The plaintiffs were entitled to provisional sentence, and the defendant, unless he could make out some better case, must pay the promissory note. As to the case quoted by his learned friend, he submitted that it differed in material respects from the present case.

Sir H. Juta having briefly replied, Buchanan, A.C.J., said: This is an application for provisional sentence upon a liquid document, a promissory note signed by the defendant, and now overdue. The genuineness of the note is not in dispute, but the defence set up is that there is no consideration, or rather that the consideration for the note was immoral, viz., that the note was given to retire forged notes and to prevent prosecution of the person who had committed forgery. I may say at once that, if this had been clear, I think no Court would have the slightest hesitation in holding that this was an immoral consideration, and that a note given for such consideration could not be sued upon. The law is quite clearly laid down in the case of Harris, which has been referred to. In the case of Harris there is no doubt that the person who took the note, viz., the bank manager, knew that the consideration for which he took the note was a forged note. I quite agree with Sir Henry Juta that even in this case, if the bank manager knew that the notes were forged, the case of Harris would apply, but I must look at all the circumstances to see whether that is the case or not. At the time this note was given, Israelsohn Bros., the brothers-in-law of the defendant, had large discounts with the Standard Bank. Some of these documents were due, others were falling due, and one thing that may well create suspicion upon these notes is the fact that these notes, which the defendant signed, were not due at the time of the transaction in dispute. On looking at the affidavits I find that it is stated that the defendant in this case, together with his brother-in-law (Israelsohn), called at the bank and asked the bank to be lenient with Israelsohn Bros. This statement is not denied. Now it may well be that Israelsohn wished to have these notes, which were forgeries, and which afterwards led to his conviction for forgery, removed from the bank, and that this knowledge may have been imparted to the defendant, Hotz, without being imparted to the bank manager. If, from other circumstances, I could gather that the bank manager knew that these notes which he wished to be retired were forged, I should certainly refuse provisional sentence in this case. The notes were not retained by the bank, but given over to Hotz, and how they were given over to the Court in the criminal case is not made clear. Here is the bill signed by Hotz in favour of the bank on the 18th August. What is the conduct of Hotz? After the bill is given and before it is due, or rather when it is falling due, there is a communication with the local branch manager and with the head manager, with the object of getting time allowed in which to meet the liability which is undertaken. Israelsohns were even then threatened with a prosecution for fraudulent insolvency. I do not think that it is clear that a definite charge of forgery was laid. The defendant does not in any way suggest, either in his communication with the branch manager or with the head manager, that he should have special consideration for the character of the debt, being such as it was, a knowledge that forged notes were being taken up. Moreover, he makes a payment in February of £100, with interest due upon the bill, and he makes a similar payment also in March. He passed a mortgage bond, which is still in existence against his property, covering this bill. This mortgage bond is still registered, and there has been no attempt to set it aside. It was not until afterwards, when criminal proceedings were taken, that through his attorneys he alleged that it was an immoral consideration. On the 18th April, through his attorney, he called upon the bank at once to cancel the bond and give up the guarantee he had given, and also to give up the note, and said that, unless they did so within ten days, he would take proceedings to compel them to do so. He did not take proceedings. When it became known that there was to be a criminal prosecution, one can quite understand that the defendant especially should not take proceedings until that question of forgery should be disposed of by the Court, and it might also to some extent explain the delay of the bank. The whole point I have before me is, that here is a liquid document—a genuine document, admittedly due secured by a mortgage bond—upon which payments have been made from time to time by the defendant. The defendant now repudiates his liability upon this bill, and says it was given for an immoral consideration. Now the immoral consideration has not been shown to have been known to the bank at the time the note was given. I cannot on the affidavits come to the conclusion that the bank knew that it was an immoral consideration. The bank gave consideration for this note. The defendant must, as far as the bank is concerned, pay the debt. On the ordinary principles which govern provisional sentence, I think the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed, and provisional sentence will be given accordingly, with costs.

PAARL BOARD OF EXECUTORS V.
SILBERT.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence for £2,800 upon a mortgage bond, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; the counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable. Order granted.

MOTIONS.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL V. MILLS. 1905. Oct. 26th.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C.), was for the applicants (defendants in the action). Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), was for the respondent (plaintiff in the action).

Mr. Schreiner moved for leave to take certain evidence on commission. The case, he said, had been set down for the 7th November, but as there were several cases on the list which had priority on that date, it seemed very unlikely that this case would be reached. The action (counsel said) concerned the liability of the Council for a slip of mud or earth on the other side of the Lion's Head, beyond Clifton.

The case was set down for hearing on the 5th February, His Lordship remarking that there were no less than seven cases set down for the 7th November.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the
Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

SHARPE V. SHARPE AND } 1905.
VENN. } Oct. 27th.

This was an action brought by Archibald John Sharpe, of Woodstock, against his wife, Elizabeth Jacoba Sharpe, of Salt River, on the ground of her alleged adultery, with one George Venn, against whom damages in the sum of £500 were claimed.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he was married to the first defendant in Cape Town on the 22nd September, 1896. He alleged that on divers dates, in September and October, 1904, at Regent-street, Woodstock, and other places, the first defendant committed adultery with the second defendant. He claimed, as against the first defendant, a decree of divorce and forfeiture of any benefits accruing from the marriage, and as against the second defendant £500 damages.

The first defendant in her plea denied the allegations of adultery, and prayed that the claim may be dismissed.

Mr. Alexander appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Lewis appeared for the first defendant. As to the second defendant, it was stated that he was confined in Roeland-street Gaol for crime, and that a letter had been received from him, saying that he "pleaded not guilty in this case."

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the Marriage Register, Colonial Secretary's Office, gave evidence as to the registration of the marriage.

Archibald John Sharpe (the plaintiff) said that when he married defendant she was known by the name of Mrs. Fenton. They first lived in Chapell-street, until November, 1899, when witness left his wife on account of the scandalous way in which she had acted. They went to Stellenbosch, and afterwards returned and lived together until November, 1901. Witness then went to Caledon to work on the railway, and subsequently to Simon's Town, his wife remaining in Aberdeen-street, Woodstock. Witness met Venn at Sir Lowry's Pass. Venn came to his house about the beginning of 1901, but after staying about a week, he went to Middelburg, and witness a little later went to Bloemfontein. Witness had allowed his wife £14 a month while he was at Bloemfontein. On his return in March, 1903, he found that his wife was occupying a room at 2, Goldsmith-road. There were two beds in the room, and when witness asked his wife whose bed the second one was, she replied that it was "George's"—meaning George Venn. He asked her if she was a respectable woman to do such a thing, and she merely laughed, and said, "Oh, it's all right." He insisted upon Venn leaving the house, with the result that Venn went to Camp's Bay. After that witness's wife lived in Ormskirk-street, where, on several occasions, he found Venn in the same bedroom with her. He remonstrated with his wife about her conduct. He continued to live with her for the sake of the two children—girls of 9 and 5 years respectively—but last year, becoming certain of the relations between the defendants, he left his wife. He desired to have custody of the two children, but admitted that he had not made a claim to that effect in his declaration.

Cross-examined: He was never a particular friend of Mr. Venn; they were workmates, having been employed on constructions together. There were three rooms and a kitchen in the house witness and his wife lived in in Ormskirk-street. Mr. Venn visited them at his wife's request. Mr. Venn slept two nights in the passage, and another night he slept in the same bedroom as witness and his wife but that was without witness's permission. Witness was now living at Tennyson-street, the house being kept by a nurse, who was divorced from her husband. He admitted having written the letter (produced) from Touws River, but said it was merely a bit of bluff, and that he had since then lived with his wife. He said in the letter that he had "got somebody else who was better to him." He merely wrote the letter in order to frighten his wife. "Mr. Shortle" had also slept in the same room as witness and his wife. There was a great dance party at the house the night Venn was arrested. Witness often watched the house.

Henry Oliver, fitter, Doune-street, Observatory, said that he remembered the two defendants occupying a room in Goldsmith-road, Salt River. He had seen the defendants together in the bedroom. He had stayed at the same house as the defendants in Devon-street and Regent-street, Woodstock, the defendants occupying one room. Mr. Shortle used to sleep in the same room as Mrs. Sharpe when Mr. Venn was away. During a great portion of the time plaintiff was absent up-country. Mrs. Sharpe often used to speak to witness about Venn, and had told him that she loved Venn, and that she was vexed because he had another young lady. Witness on one occasion paid a visit to Plumer's-road at Mrs. Sharpe's request, when he found Venn in the same room. They had a glass of wine. Witness had got no interest in the case, and had no ill-feeling against either of the defendants. He had seen Mrs.

Sharpe in bed with another man, but he was not sure that the man was Venn.

Cross-examined: It was not true that Mrs. Sharpe had given notice to witness to leave the house. Witness occupied the same room as a blind woman. He had never seen plaintiff, his wife, and Venn all in the same room. Witness had never seen any guilty conduct between the defendants.

Johanna Osborne, a nurse, living at Tennyson-street, Salt River, said that she had known the parties for some years. In October, 1904, Mrs. Sharpe came and asked her to lend her £5, in order to get Venn away to East London, so that he would be separated from a young lady, with whom he was in love. Mrs. Sharpe told witness that she was devotedly in love with Venn.

Herbert George Hunt, signalman, Salt River, also gave evidence for the plaintiff.

Elizabeth Jacoba Sharpe (the defendant) said that her husband brought Venn to the house in the first instance, and said that she must make room for him. Mr. Shortle, her brother-in-law, was at the house at the time. Venn afterwards went to Middelburg, and witness's husband later on left for Bloemfontein. Witness subsequently removed to Goldsmith-road, and while she was there Venn came down and asked if he could live with her. She wrote to her husband, and he consented to Venn occupying another bed in the same room. When plaintiff returned from up-country, they all slept in the same room. Shortle also slept in the same room, and plaintiff raised no objection. Later on witness removed to Ormskirk-street. Plaintiff deserted her on the 1st July last. Her husband slept away for about a month before he deserted her, and on his return in the mornings he used to tell her that he had been out gambling. Oliver was sleeping in the same room as the blind woman; he was her guardian—to spend her money. Plaintiff afterwards cohabited with witness in Plumer's-road. She denied that she had gone to Mrs. Osborne to borrow money, on behalf of Venn.

Cross-examined: Venn never occupied the same room as witness without her husband's "instructions." She thought Oliver had given this evidence because she had "chucked him out," and he had got spite against her.

Michael Shortle, brother-in-law of the first defendant, said he was in the house in Ormskirk-street in 1901, when plaintiff brought George Venn there. Witness and Venn slept on the floor, while plaintiff and his wife occupied the bed. Witness had never seen any guilty conduct between the defendants.

Cross-examined: Witness was a recruiting agent for native labour.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Your name is Michael Shortle?]

Witness: Yes.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: You have been here before, I believe?]

Witness: Yes, and so has Sharpe, my lord; he's been convicted in this Court for stealing a box.

Josephine Maria Rix, daughter of the first defendant, also gave evidence.

Cross-examined: Witness was living with a man named Wessels, but she was not married to him.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that after their marriage, the parties had lived in a way that was, perhaps, not very much to be commended. There was nothing, however, to show that they lived unhappily together. The husband went to work at Caledon, on the railway, where he seemed to have made the acquaintance of a man named Venn, and when Venn came down, as he was a poor man, plaintiff gave him accommodation at his house. At that time he was only occupying one room in the house. Afterwards, when her husband had gone to Bloemfontein for work his wife took in this man, and they lived in the same bedroom together when the plaintiff was away. He (the learned judge) did not see that there was anything on the part of the husband which conduced to this conduct on her part, and, in fact, misconduct on his part was not pleaded. A decree of divorce would be granted, and defendant would be declared to have forfeited any benefits accruing from the marriage in community. There would be no order as to costs. No judgment would be entered against the second defendant, Venn.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

BOLDT V. BURGER ESTATES, LTD. 1905
Oct. 30th.
" 31st.
Nov. 1st.

Contractor—Work done—Retention money—Damages.

This was an action brought by Fritz Boldt, engineer and contractor, Cape Town, against the Burger Estates, Ltd., to recover certain sums alleged to be due upon a contract for the construction of an irrigation canal in the district of Robertson, and for damages.

From the pleadings, it appeared that a contract was entered into between plaintiff and defendants on the 9th April, 1903, whereby the former was to construct over the defendants' property a certain canal, watercourse, or furrow, and in a certain time, in the Breede River, in the district of Robertson, in consideration of the said work the plaintiff to be paid the sum of £4,750. Plaintiff said that it was a condition of the said agreement that he was to be paid fortnightly for the work as it progressed, that the defendants fell into arrear with their payments, and that finally, on the 26th December, 1903, owing to the action of the defendants, he was compelled to desist from work. He claimed (a) judgment for the sum of £100 13s. 2d., due for work which had been performed and had not been paid for by the defendants; (b) £159 10s. 6d., retention money; (c) £500 damages, by reason of the wrongful and unlawful conduct of the defendants and their breach of contract; (d) interest a tempore morae; (e) alternative relief; (f) costs of suit.

Defendants, in their plea, denied that the plaintiff had fulfilled his part of the contract, and said that certain work which he had done was inspected by Mr. Burger, who was appointed for that purpose, and was condemned. They said that the plaintiff had not been compelled to desist from work on account of their action, but that he ceased work entirely at his own instance. They denied that they were indebted to the plaintiff in the sums claimed, or any other sums. For a claim in reconvention, the defendants said that, owing to the wrongful and unlawful conduct of the plaintiff, they had been compelled to engage another person to complete the contract, and that they had had, as a consequence, to pay a total sum for the work of £5,500, or £750 in excess of the amount of the contract, and also that owing to Boldt's breach of contract, they had sustained damages in the sum of £250, as a result of the delay in completion of the work. Defendants (plaintiffs in reconvention) prayed for judgment in the said sums of £750 and £250, and costs of suit.

The replication was general, but as a plea to the claim in reconvention, the plaintiff (defendant in reconvention) said that he was in no way liable for the expenses incurred by the plaintiffs, and repeated that it was through the wrongful and unlawful conduct of the plaintiffs in reconvention that he was compelled to desist from the work. He denied that the plaintiffs in reconvention had sustained any damages through any default on his part, and prayed that their claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The rejoinder was general.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Dr. Greer) for plaintiff; Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Van Zyl) for defendants.

The plaintiff (Fritz Boldt) said that he was a qualified civil engineer of Germany. He had been a railway engineer in Germany. He had been engaged on engineering works in this colony for nine years. The Government sent down Mr. Wright to make a survey of the canal. Mr. Wright left, and witness took up and completed the survey. Witness, on his return from Europe in 1903, was met by Mr. Burger, who asked him to make a contract for the canal. He undertook to carry out the work on a certain specification that he had drawn up, the price being £4,750. One of the provisions of the contract was that the work was to be done under inspection by the defendant company. The so-called specification was rather an estimate of the cost than an actual specification. Witness prepared a plan showing the situation, widths, and depths of the canal. He started work about the middle of April, 1903, and went on until the 26th December. He worked without friction until the 13th October; the work had been inspected by Mr. Burger, who had been appointed inspector by the company. The payments had been regularly made by the company each fortnight up to that stage. He received no complaints as to the quality of the work until October. Mr. Burger made a complaint in respect to a mistake in witness's pay-sheet of the 24th October. Witness made a claim on the 21st October to the amount of £176, but received only £75 on account. Mr. De Kock (second cashier of the company) saying that he had no money to meet the payment. Mr. Burger again visited the canal on the 30th October, when he expressed his satisfaction with the work, with the result that the balance of the money owing to witness was paid in full. Certain sections of the work were afterwards done by Mr. Blom, while certain other portions were done by Mr. Burger before witness went on the job. The suggestion was made on the 30th October by Mr. Burger that witness should sublet some of the work to Mr. Blom. On the 31st October witness asked Mr. Burger for an increase of price, because the work was much heavier than he had anticipated, on account of the nature of the ground. Burger gave witness a fortnight's notice to stop the work, but witness did not accept the notice, as he did not think Mr. Burger was authorised to give it. On the 3rd November he came to Cape Town and saw Mr. Michaul (chairman of the company), and spoke to him about the price he was getting for the work. Mr. Michaul told him to put his complaints in writing, and witness then returned to Robertson. He (plaintiff) accordingly put his complaints in writing. He could not tell at that time whether he was going to gain or lose on the contract, because of the difference in the character of the ground from what he had anticipated. On the 4th November he made an ordinary fortnightly claim for £128 for work done. The claim was payable on the 7th November. He tried to obtain payment from Mr. De Kock, but he was told that he was not entitled to any money at that time. Mr. Burger proposed to witness that he should give a portion of the work to Mr. Blom, and let him have the tools in his (plaintiff's) possession. Witness declined to fall in with the suggestion, and Mr. Burger then said: "All right, wait until matters are ripe." Witness later on received a telegram from Mr. Michau telling him to apply to Mr. De Kock for £50. Mr. De Kock when seen replied that the money had not arrived. Mr. Burger afterwards said that the money would be paid on the 11th November, but it was not paid even then. Mr. Blom appeared on the work on the 9th November, and said that he had been sent by Mr. Burger. Witness told him that he must understand that he (plaintiff) had not engaged him and that if he started work it was on his own responsibility. Witness had to pay his workmen out of his own pocket. Witness had to come to Cape Town, and his attorneys, upon his instructions, sent a letter to the defendants, calling upon them to fulfil their part of the contract. Witness was present at a meeting of the directors held in Cape Town on the 13th November. His application for an increased rate was rejected. He agreed to continue the work at the old price, and he went back to Robertson. On the 14th November he sent in a new account, but that also was unpaid. Mr. Burger came about the 21st November, accompanied by Mr. De Kock. Mr. Burger inspected the work, and a complaint was made by Mr. De Kock in reference to a certain road crossing. A further contract was entered into, whereby the lower part of the section E to F was to be continued by Blom, and the witness was to receive 10 per cent. retention money. He entered into this contract in order to make things go smoothly. From that time Blom was always paid by the company. During November damage was caused by an extraordinary rainfall, the water rising considerably above the normal level of the furrow. Witness had set apart in his estimate a sum of £50 for contingencies of this kind. He had further disputes with the company with regard to the amounts due to him. Deductions were made on account of work which had actually been passed and paid for previously. On the 19th December he instructed his attorneys to write to the defendants informing them that unless the deductions were remitted he should have to discontinue work. He received no reply to the letter, and on the 26th December he discontinued work. He had not been turned off the work by the company, but he had had to stop because they discontinued his fortnightly payments. There had been negotiations with a view to arbitration, but these had come to naught.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness admitted having written a letter to the company, pointing out that, owing to the formation of the ground, he was hardly making 10 per cent. on the contract.

Mr. Burton: Are all the statements contained in this letter true?—Witness: No.

Then, why did you lie?—I didn't lie. At that time I was losing. I had not made up my accounts, but then I knew that my financial position was not good.

In answer to a further question, he admitted that he had written a silly letter, and said that if he had been calmer he would have written a more sensible letter.

Cross-examination continued: He said in one of his letters that the work was costing him three times more than he was getting, but he only referred to certain sections, which proved heavier work than he had thought. On the average, however, the cost was less than he had estimated for. He was working in the rock at the time he left the job. He denied that on the 31st October Mr. Burger said he was dissatisfied with the work. He did not tell Mr. Burger on that occasion that it was impossible for him to go on with the contract, because he was losing too heavily. Instead of witness proposing to leave the work, Mr. Burger and Mr. De Kock jumped to the idea of getting him to abandon the contract, proposing to give witness a fortnight's notice. Witness denied that he had ever given notice to the company that he was going to discontinue work on the contract, despite the report made by Mr. Burger to the directors. On the Sunday following the meeting that he had with Mr. Burger and Mr. De Kock, he met Mr. Burger, but he did not tell him that he regretted having given notice to discontinue the contract. On the other hand, he told Mr. Burger that he had not the slightest idea of abandoning the contract. He did not propose to Mr. Burger that he should get someone to assist him in the work. On the other hand, Mr. Burger proposed to put Mr. Blom into the work. He went into the contract with Mr. Blom, so as to help to bring the job to a peaceable conclusion. The construction of the canal was begun by Mr. Burger, and witness took up the work at the point where Mr. Burger had finished. Witness saw Mr. Blom at the job after he (Boldt) had left, but he never saw him repairing the work which he (Boldt) had carried out.

No work had been done over again, except a wall, which had not been placed at its proper height. Mr. Burger did not complain about the way in which he had sloped the krantz. Stones would still fall in from that slope. All the same, he considered that the slope he had made was sufficient. He had never made alterations of the work which he had done. Mr. Burger did not complain that he had not taken out his levels properly by the gravel pit. He did not complain to witness that he was making the canal too shallow. Mr. Burger made deductions on account of certain leakages. Witness did not know anything about the canal having leaked in various places during rains in January, 1904, and flooded the vineyards of Mr. Marais. Such a statement, he thought, must be an exaggeration. He did not consider that the walls of the culvert were too thin. He had only claimed for £35 out of £50, to which he would have been entitled if he had completed the culvert. He had very nearly completed the culvert when he ceased work. He had not been paid a halfpenny in respect of this part of the contract. On the 7th November he claimed £14 on account of the culvert, but he was paid nothing in respect of that matter. He did not receive a letter from the defendants saying that Mr. Scaife would inspect the works on behalf of the Government on the 5th December. He did not know anything about Mr. Scaife's visit until it had actually taken place. His attorneys received the letter, but he did not receive any intimation of the visit until it had been paid.

Re-examined: Witness was told by the company to carry out the work as economically as possible, and to do it for not more than £5,000. Canals of a similar length, when carried out by the Government, had cost £30,000.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Then, why did you undertake the work at £4,000?]

Witness: £5,000, my lord. I would have been able to carry it out at that price.

Replying further to the Court: Witness said that in carrying out the work he did not carefully follow the line of survey, but, in order to avoid the deeper excavations, he went round, and thus saved expense. He understood that the canal had given every satisfaction.

Charles D. Braime, A.M.I.C.E., said that he had had considerable experience of irrigation work. He inspected the work in question on the 25th or 26th January, 1904. The culvert was rough work, but it was perfectly sound, and suitable for its purpose. When he looked at the retaining walls built by Mr. Burger, he found that they were bulging in three places, and remarked at the time that there would be trouble in the future from the walls. The length of canal opposite Mr. Marais's vineyard was, in his opinion, an excellent piece of work. On the section south of the Groot Rivier, the work was, in his opinion, in accordance with the specification. He thought the work had been carried out on proper principles. The canal was not too narrow. Witness took particular care to see that the widths were correct.

Dr. Greer: Would the canal, as far as the work had been carried out by Mr. Boldt, have answered the purpose for which it was built?

Witness (deliberately): That is rather difficult. In the first place, a canal, after it has been built, would almost invariably leak. You can hardly expect anything else. There has hardly been a canal built in the whole world that did not leak at first, and did not require maintenance.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: It improves with age?]

Witness: A canal does, as a rule. If you have leaky places, they will silt up. They are bound to leak when they are new, sure to leak. In further evidence, he said that the canal was not very finished work, but he would regard finished work on an undertaking of that kind as a waste of money.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness was now engaged in the Irrigation Department, Transvaal. He was formerly in the Public Works Department of Cape Colony for about four years, having been stationed in the Midland districts. Witness did not merely inspect such places as were pointed out to him by Mr. Boldt; he inspected the work according to his own ideas. He saw one place where there was only a very little excavation on the lower side, perhaps about 6 inches. He did not think that was insufficient. It would all depend on the embankment. They would expect leakages in such material as Boldt would be going through at that point. If Boldt had made deep excavations through the solid rock, the expense would have been enormous, and would have provided a worse scandal than a Government irrigation scheme.

R. H. Charters, M.I.C.E., said that he inspected the works on the 25th and 26th May of this year. Some water was flowing through the canal at that time. He saw a slight leakage on the first day in various parts of "e" and "f," and on the second day he saw a considerable leakage near the Krantz. He would have expected, if the canal had been running at full, to find no leakage, but he understood that the canal had not been running at full, and under the circumstances he would expect to find a slight leakage. He thought the canal was a very fair piece of work. He gauged the velocity of the water between sections "d" and "e," constructed by plaintiff, and found that it was running very uniformly throughout. The work was decidedly rough in character, but he thought it was quite suitable for its purpose as a country canal. He saw nothing about the work that one could complain of.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness saw the work 18 months after Mr. Boldt had left the job, and, of course, he had no knowledge of what might have been done in the meantime. The work could be improved both from an engineering and contractor's point of view, but he would not say that he would have condemned the work if he had been appointed to inspect it on behalf of the company. A good deal would depend on the price his employers were prepared to pay for the work.

Michiel Mauritz, formerly in the employ of Mr. Boldt, on the works, also gave evidence.

Cross-examined: During the progress of the contract, the plaintiff had a good deal of trouble through the Kafirs, who were employed on the works, running away.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Thomas W. W. Perry, engineer, of the Public Works Department, said that he inspected the works on the 8th January, 1904, at the instance of the Government, and at the request of the company. He was instructed by the Government not to enter into the dispute. He saw the work in the course of other duties he had to perform. At the Krantz he saw a marked difference between the work done by Mr. Burger and that done by the plaintiff. The former's work was much more finished. The work done between sections E and F by the plaintiff was very unsatisfactory, and he would not, as an engineer, have been prepared to pass it.

Louis Jacobus Burger, the vendor of the property, said that he now resided in the River Hex district, Worcester. He began the work in question in 1900, and, while he was the owner of the property, he had some talk with Boldt about completing the work. Witness, upon the formation of the company, became the manager. Boldt tendered to the company, but no restriction was placed on the figure to which he might go. Describing the work done by plaintiff, witness went on to say that even in April he had to complain about the work at the Krantz and about the work beyond at the gravel pit. He had also to find fault with the way in which Boldt performed portions of the contract on subsequent inspections that he (witness) made. After Boldt had left the work, Blom was paid 15s. a day. When Boldt had given up, Blom had to remove part of the stone construction, and had to strengthen one of the walls by riding earth up to it. The water ran through the walls into Mr. Marais' property. A lot of work had also to be done over again at the Krantz. Blom had to finish the work begun upon the culvert by Boldt. If Blom had not done over again work which was supposed to have been done by Boldt, the canal would not have been of any use.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness made payments as the work progressed, in accordance with the value of what had been done by Boldt. He did not make any complaint in writing about Boldt's work. Each time witness paid him in July, Boldt said that he would be obliged to give up the contract. Witness was not anxious to get Blom on the job, because he was a friend of witness. He desired to get the contract completed as soon as possible. He had not spoken to Boldt of £5,000 as a sum that he should keep before him when he tendered for the work.

Barend Louis Blom, contractor, Robertson, said that he had to execute over again a considerable amount of work which was supposed to have been finished by the plaintiff.

Cross-examined: Witness commenced the job on the 9th November, but two months previously Mr. Burger had asked him to take on the work at 5s. a yard. Witness declined that offer. He arranged with Mr. Burger that he was to be paid 15s. a day. Eight days after he had begun the job, Burger came and offered him 4s. 6d. a yard, but this witness refused to accept, and he then entered into an agreement with Boldt whereby he was to receive 4s. 6d. a yard. He was promised that if he did not come out all right at that price, some allowance would be made to him. He was paid 15s. a day, as a matter of fact, during all the time he was on the job.

Johannes Jacobus de Kock, local secretary to the defendant company at Robertson, gave evidence as to why certain money was withheld from the plaintiff.

Cross-examined: There was nothing in the minutes of the company appointing him to the position of local secretary. He had been appointed informally. He also kept a store at Robertson. At one time Boldt had gone unpaid for a month.

Re-examined: During November, 1903, Boldt owed the company money.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: "That is provided for in the contract. It has nothing to do with the settlement."]

John J. Michau, chairman of the defendant company, said that at a directors' meeting on November 13, 1903, Boldt said that unless he was paid another £250 he would not be able to continue the work. Witness was the only one present in favour of granting the £250, and the company decided to adhere to the contract. Up to the present the cost of the canal had been £5,741 14s. 11d., all of which, with the exception of £1,400 paid to the plaintiff, had been paid to Blom. Loss had been incurred through delay. In November 1 plaintiff owed the company £300, £100 of which was deducted. The balance was allowed to stand over, the understanding being that it should be deducted from the cost of the syphon which had been ordered from the plaintiff's firm.

Cross-examined: The plaintiff had to pay back the loan of £400 at the rate of £35 per month.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Then, why did you ask him for £100 in November?]

He was three months in arrears.

Mr. Searle: Was he?—Yes; it was reported to the Board that he was in arrear with his payments.

Where is it in your minutes; produce it?—It is not in the minutes.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: You did not pay him anything on November. Why did you ask him for £100?]

We had to protect ourselves. We deducted it.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: It strikes me you wanted to squeeze him out.]

No; I was sorry for Boldt.

Proceeding, witness said that the company had plenty of funds in hand; to which His Lordship and counsel replied that no one had suggested that it had not.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said: Before 1900 Mr. Burger conceived an extensive scheme of irrigation, and, with the assistance of a Government engineer he had some information given him as to levels and a sketch plan of the locality. I very much regret that a scheme of such great importance, and one so highly commended, should have been brought into court, but we have nothing to do now with the commendation of Mr. Burger for his enterprise; but we have to confine ourselves to the matters before the Court. After Burger had constructed the canal or furrow in 1903, negotiations were entered into with the plaintiff, who had been in the Government service, and had assisted in some of the preliminary investigations which had taken place. Unfortunately no proper plans or details were prepared, but on data he had before him he offered to complete the canal for £4,500. He entered upon the work in April, and worked until some time in December. He was not a man of means, and to assist him in getting tools and to import pipes, the company advanced £400 to him. They agreed that he was to send in a fortnightly statement, which was to be submitted to a representative on behalf of the company, and the amount approved of should be paid every fortnight to him for his work. At first things went tolerably smoothly, but as time went on the plaintiff found mismeasurements in the data upon which he had based his tender, and also that there was a quantity of hard rock, the presence of which he had not anticipated. The cross-section annexed to the contract shows that where this rock was found the plaintiff was not intended to excavate on both sides, but only on one, the ground excavated to be thrown up on the other side. As to the mode of construction, it was left to a great extent in Boldt's hands, subject to the approval of the company. Burger formed his scheme into a company, but he seems to be the person who controlled the work. In September or October, 1903, one of the directors, De Kock, came on the scene, and from then difficulties commenced. Boldt, on finding the heavy rock, wished the company to increase his payment. To this the managing director, Mr. J. J. Michau, was favourable, but his co-directors were not, and Burger was one of those who objected. The company held that Boldt must adhere to the contract. There was an interview between Boldt, Burger, and De Kock about the end of October, and at this interview Mr. Burger came to the conclusion that Boldt had given him notice that he was about to terminate the work. Burger might have misunderstood Boldt, for shortly after Burger wrote to the directors in Cape Town, saying that Boldt had given notice, and that he (Burger) wanted money in order to settle with Boldt. Now, Burger must either have misunderstood Boldt or misrepresented him. That is quite clear, for Boldt on November 10 says that he was quite willing to continue the work even if he obtained no profit from it, as he was anxious to save his reputation. Boldt at that time had near the works a shop from which he had obtained profit through supplying native labourers with goods. De Kock and Burger introduced a man named Blom to Boldt, and induced the latter to take Blom on, although that was against Boldt's wish. When Blom took over the work, he supplied the labourers instead of letting them buy their things from Boldt. The things Blom sold were obtained from De Kock, and when De Kock and Burger found that Boldt was not going to give up the contract, Burger omitted to inspect the works for a whole month, with the result that Boldt was kept out of his money. This put him in a critical position, because he was not a man of means, and the next account he sent in Burger reduced in such a way that Boldt could only receive £3 9s. 6d. This brought Boldt to a standstill, and, although he wrote to town, he got no redress. At this time pressure was put upon Boldt regarding certain moneys borrowed by him, instalments of which he had been paying regularly all along. All these circumstances have convinced me that there was a desire on the part, not of Mr. Michau, but of Burger and De

Kock, to squeeze Boldt out of the contract, and, as Boldt could not get his money, he had to cease work. Burger has said that Boldt had over-measured the work done by 219 yards, but I am inclined to take Boldt's version of the matter, for his claim has never before been disputed. I, therefore, find that the amount of measurement claimed by Boldt must be allowed. On the question of the amount of work done, Burger says that 600 yards have not been done properly, but expert evidence has shown that the canal had, as it were, to find itself. I agree with Burger that the work was not quite completed, although at the same time it was an ambiguous position to place Burger in, viz., to pass the work. Blom, the defendants' own witness, has said that he thinks 3d. a yard would remedy the work, and Marais does not think that there is much to be done. However, as Boldt has said that he requires 1s. a yard—and I must say that I think it is high—I think I must allow that amount, viz., £30. There is another item of £25 for work done on the culvert. It is clear it was not completed, but the work was well done. Burger has deducted £5 from the account, and I think this must be allowed, so that from the £85 10s. 9d. claimed by Boldt for work done, the sum of £35 must be deducted. The next claim is for the 10 per cent. retention money, which has been held over by the company. Undoubtedly, this work, for which £159 10s. 6d. is claimed, has been done, and must be allowed for making in all £208 9s. 6d. With regard to damages, if Boldt had any reason for discontinuing his work, the question arises, is he entitled to damages? I do not think that he is, for two reasons. One is that he discontinued the work, and the other is that the work was not of a profitable nature, and that he would not have made the £500 which he is claiming. He would have got working wages only, and not a penny more. In reconvention, the defendants claim for £750 and £250, but I do not think that they are entitled to claim, for by their own conduct they forced Boldt to give up the contract. On the claim in convention Boldt will be allowed £50 for work done, and the retention money, which is clearly due to him for work completed and passed. As to the claim for damages, nothing will be awarded. As for the case for damages by the other side, I think they are barred. Judgment will be entered for Boldt for £208 9s. 6d., with costs.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ORANGEZICHT ESTATE, LTD. { 1905.
V. TOWN COUNCIL. } Oct. 30th.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), was for the applicants, and Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), was for the defendants. The application was on behalf of the Town Council, of Cape Town, in a case which was pending, for permission to make certain excavations on the estate, which the Council say are necessary for the purpose of determining the issue in the suit, and for the appointment of a commission to take the evidence of Mr. Henry Rofe in London. If the latter application was granted it would necessitate a postponement of the trial from the present term. Both applications were opposed. The plaintiffs claimed a declaration of rights for an order against the defendants to pass certain plans and for £1,000 damages.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Maasdorp, J., said: It seems that the defendants in this case are entitled to the use of the water of certain springs situated on the lands of the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs now propose to divide the land into building lots, and to sell these lots for the purpose of building. The defendants are afraid if the land is built upon in some way or other it may affect the purity of the water springs, and consequently they wish to prevent the plaintiffs from doing anything which would injure their rights. In this case it happens that they have had it for the time being in their power to prevent such buildings by refusing to sanction plans submitted by the plaintiff; that is, of course, only a temporary expedient, and the Court would ultimately have to decide whether they have the right to protect their springs by having the plaintiffs prohibited from building. Now some very large issues will be raised in this case, and among the questions will be a very large one, as to whether the owner of a servitude to water on land has a right to prevent building, because there is some probability that his spring may be interfered with. I think the defendant is now anticipating one of the issues raised. Such an order could only be granted on the final settlement of the rights between the parties after the legal position had been decided. Without expressing any opinion of the rights of the parties, the first application will be refused. With reference to the evidence of Mr. Rofe, it seems to be material evidence, and the application in that respect will be granted. The parties will go to trial by the 12th February, Mr. Dwyer to act as commissioner, costs to be costs in the cause.

VAN DER RIET V. VAN ZYL.

This was an action brought by George Louis Werendly van der Riet, of Britstown, against Jurie Johannes Wilhelm van Zyl, of Simonspoort, in the division of Britstown, for an order calling upon the defendant to execute a contract of lease, or, in default, for judgment in the sum of £1,000. On the 22nd May, 1900, the plaintiff entered into a contract of lease in respect of certain buildings and erven situated in Britstown, and on the 18th February, 1905, the plaintiff duly exercised his right of renewal, whereby the lease was extended for a further period of five years. This the defendant denied.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Douglas Buchanan) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Bisset) was for the defendant.

George Louis van der Reit, the plaintiff, said on February 18 he gave notice of his exercise of the option of renewal for five years from July 1, 1905, and received a letter from the defendant accepting. On July 1 the defendant came to his office, and plaintiff asked for the option of another five years, and defendant said: "All right, you can have it." The original renewal was to be cancelled, and a new lease was to be entered into. They went over to Mr. Raath, the attorney, and instructed him to draw up the lease on the same day. In the afternoon the defendant came to witness's office, and said his wife was against it, and he could not do it. Defendant went away, and on Raath's advice he wrote to the defendant holding him to the agreement, but he got no reply, and defendant subsequently refused to sign the contract unless witness paid him £50.

In cross-examination, witness denied what defendant said in reply to his request for another five years' option: "No, I won't live that long."

Nanne Johannes Schmierstina, book-keeper in plaintiff's employ, gave corroborative evidence as to what took place between plaintiff and defendant in plaintiff's office.

Baron Jacobus Raath, attorney, of Britstown, stated that on an occasion of the plaintiff and defendant coming to his office, the plaintiff stated that the defendant had again given him the place for ten years, and asked him to draw up a copy of the old contract, and simply alter the dates. The defendant in a joke said: "I suppose I'll be dead when the contract expires."

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

J. J. van Zyl, the defendant, denied making any new contract with the plaintiff. After the plaintiff kept troubling him time after time, witness told him positively that there could be no new contract. Van der Riet came to him subsequently, and said he wanted to draw up a contract for from ten to fifteen years, and witness refused. The plaintiff was constantly troubling him about the contract. When Mr. Raath spoke about the contract, witness denied that he ever agreed to the extension.

Cross-examined: Mr. Raath had been his legal adviser. The plaintiff asked for an extension of from five to fifteen years, and witness walked away in a rage.

Charles Johannes van Zyl corroborated his father as to what took place in the presence of Van der Riet, about the contract. His father said the old contract was quite good, and the plaintiff was trying to catch him for another five years.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Maasdorp, J., said: At one stage of the case it seemed to me not at all improbable that this dispute was the result of a misunderstanding between the two parties, and that in the face of that misunderstanding it would be impossible for the Court to hold that the parties had arrived at a mutual consent. But as the case developed itself, it seemed to me that there was such a conflict of evidence, which placed the parties in such a position that there was no room for a misunderstanding, and both counsel have contended that there is a serious conflict of evidence in this case. The question now is whether the evidence in this case supports the position taken up by the plaintiff, or by the defendant. The positions are so far apart that they cannot both be maintained, and it cannot be said upon considering any of them that there is still any room for misunderstanding. As to what took place on the 1st July, the plaintiff's evidence is corroborated, and the defendant's evidence is uncorroborated. If that had stood by itself I would have still maintained that the plaintiff should prove his case. Upon the whole of the evidence, I am satisfied that Raath was not in possession of the contract—it may have been left in Mr. Cillie's possession, whose clerk, Raath then was. On the whole, I find that the contract, as set forth in the draft agreement, made by Mr. Raath, contains the terms agreed upon by the parties. An order will be given on the defendant to execute this lease, the defendant to pay the costs, the plaintiff declared a necessary witness.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

ANDERSON V. ANDERSON. { 1905.
Oct. 31st.

This was an action brought by Emily Agnes Anderson, of Salt River, against her husband Richard Anderson, an engine-driver, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, a decree of divorce, by reason of the defendant's malicious desertion. Mr. Bailey was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default. Counsel explained that the defendant had filed a plea, but his solicitors were not instructed to proceed further. The defendant's present whereabouts were unknown. The parties were married on the 26th December, 1900, at Cape Town, and on the 11th November, 1901, he deserted the plaintiff, and since then had not contributed to her support. The defendant, in his plea, admitted deserting the plaintiff, and he claimed in re-convention a decree of divorce, alleging that the plaintiff had committed adultery with one William Twentyman Jackson. The replication denied the allegations in the plea.

Emily Agnes Anderson, plaintiff in the suit, said she was married to the defendant on the 26th December, 1900. She lived with her husband for eleven months. On the 11th November, 1901, the defendant left her, and since then he had not contributed to her support. She knew Jackson, who was a friend of the defendant, and she denied the allegations made by her husband. The defendant got jealous of Jackson without any reason.

By Maasdorp, J.: She had heard nothing of the defendant since 1901. Witness supported herself for four years as a cook.

An order of restitution of conjugal rights granted, the defendant to return by 30th November, or show cause by the 12th December why a decree of divorce should not be granted. Personal service to be effected, failing which, leave to counsel to move again.

Postea (December 13). Rule absolute.

DIRKS V. SCHRODER.

This was an action for an order compelling the defendant to deliver to the plaintiff a certain receipt for transfer duty, dated June, 1895, and for £100 damages, for wrongful detention. The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a farmer, and the defendant an attorney, both residing in the district of Gordonia. About August, 1894, the plaintiff purchased a farm from one Eiman, and paid transfer duty to the amount of £20 17s., and received through his attorney (Tilney) a duly-authenticated receipt. Thereafter Tilney handed the receipt to the defendant, and the defendant had the receipt still in his possession. The receipt belonged to the plaintiff, and through the defendant's wrongful detention, he was unable to pass transfer of the farm.

The plea admitted that the transfer duty was paid, and that a duly-authenticated receipt was signed. The defendant was instructed by Eiman not to pass transfer until the whole of the purchase price had been paid. The defendant detained the said receipt for the purpose of passing transfer when the purchase price was paid. There still remained £50 owing in respect of the purchase price. On the 10th April the defendant tendered to the plaintiff the said receipt, together with costs, which tender he repeats.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) was for the defendant.

H. J. H. Dirks, plaintiff in the case, stated on the 29th August, 1894, he bought the farm from Eiman for £500. He got receipts, including one for £20 cash, which he paid. By one of the documents, Eiman was to pay the expenses of survey and transfer. As a matter of fact witness paid the transfer duty through Mr. Tilney. Witness had paid the whole of the purchase price in 1895. In 1898 he could have sold the farm for £750. Witness had paid his agent £25 in respect of searches, etc., over the receipt.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: It was one of the farms that came before the Concession Court, and transfer could not be given until the boundary was fixed. He did not know that the boundary was only fixed in 1903.

Charles Richard Steyn, an articled clerk, in the employment of Mr. Tilney, attorney, Upington, gave supporting evidence.

Mr. Upington closed his case.

Alexander Thompson, farmer, of Bechuanaland, stated that in 1899 witness sold goods to Eiman, who showed him a copy of a promissory note, and witness, on writing to Mr. Schroder, received an original promissory note, but he could not get the money from Dirks. Witness returned the promissory note to Eiman, who eventually paid him. Dirks did not deny owing the money, but said he would pay nothing until he got his papers.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The promissory note was not endorsed to him. He never traded in promissory notes, and he did not know that the note should be indorsed over to him. He could not get across the line during the war to collect the money from the plaintiff.

Ernst Schroder, defendant, stated he was an attorney practising at Upington. Dirks and Eiman came to him on 20th February, 1895. They asked witness to do the transfer work in connection with the farm. In reply to witness Eiman said there was still a balance of £77 to be paid on the purchase price of £500. Dirks admitted the promissory note, of which the one produced was an exact copy. Witness took steps at once to get the grant, and eventually the grant was issued on 27th November, 1903.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The moment Mr. Steyn wrote he found the transfer duty receipt.

Gert Eiman, who sold the farm to the plaintiff, said he was paid £423, and afterwards he went to the defendant, and said that £54 was still owing. Witness showed the defendant a promissory note, given by the plaintiff for £77, and explained that £23 had been paid off. The promissory note was lost by his wife. Dirks had not yet given him the £54. The plaintiff said he had no money when witness asked him for the £54.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: He told Mr. Steyn that as far as witness was concerned, he had done everything to enable the plaintiff to get transfer. He signed a paper at the Magistrate's Office in order that Dirks should get transfer. He did not want to give transfer before he got the money.

Other evidence having been called, and counsel heard in argument, on the facts.

Maasdorp, J., held that no damages had resulted from the withholding of the document, and ordered the defendant to deliver up the receipt, and pay costs up to the date of tender, the plaintiff to pay costs subsequent to that.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte VAN REENEN. } 1905.
Nov. 1st.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order authorising the executors in the estate of petitioner's late grandfather, Joseph Vink, to pay a certain inheritance due to the petitioner.

Mr. Molteno appeared for the executors, and raised no objection to the application, but opposed costs being paid out of the estate, on the ground that the application was solely in the interest of the petitioner.

Mr. Gardiner contended that there was no need for the executors to have compelled the petitioner to seek an order of Court.

Order granted as prayed, costs to come out of the fund, which is released under the will.

ANSTICE V. ANSTICE.

This was an application upon notice, calling upon the respondent Walter French Anstice to show cause why an order of Court granted by Mr. Justice Maasdorp, restraining the present applicant (Mrs. Anstice) from withdrawing certain money, should not be set aside, and why the respondent should not be ordered to pay over a sum of £40 to enable her to institute proceedings for divorce or judicial separation, and also for alimony, pending the action.

A number of affidavits were read, from which it appeared that the present respondent was manager of an hotel at Dwars-in-de-Weg, district of Matjesfontein, and that his wife recently left him on account of domestic unhappiness, and removed to Cape Town. There appeared to have been frequent quarrels, and the wife alleged that her husband was addicted to drink, and that he had committed cruelty towards her, and had threatened to take both her life and his own. Two sums of money had been placed in the bank -- £35 in the Post Office Savings Bank and £70 in the African Banking Corporation. The former sum had already been withdrawn by Mrs. Anstice, but the latter could not be touched until May next. Mrs. Anstice said that the money was hers; Mr. Anstice said that it was his. Mrs. Anstice said that her husband had boasted to her that he had committed adultery with a lady now in Canada, and with other persons; while the defendant, on his part, denied the allegations, and said that he was prepared to call evidence in support of his statements.

Mr. Gardiner was for the applicant; Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that he was not prepared to set aside the previous order of Court, but he thought that the wife should receive £5 per month from her husband by way of alimony, pending an action for divorce or judicial separation, as she might be advised. An order would be made accordingly, the first payment to fall due on November 15. Costs to be costs in the cause.

SMARTT SYNDICATE V. PHILLIPS AND OTHERS.

This was an application upon notice of motion for removal of bar and for the appointment of a commission to take certain evidence in Johannesburg. Mr. Gardiner was for applicant; Dr. Greer was for respondent.

After hearing affidavits on both sides and counsel in argument,

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that an order would be given that the bar be removed, and leave would be given to file a replication forthwith, Plaintiff having been barred, must pay the wasted costs. A commission would be granted de bene esse to examine the witness Phillips in Johannesburg, Mr. Advocate Percival Smith to be commissioner. This was clearly a case in which the applicant should pay costs of opposition to the application.

CALMEYER V. DAMERELL.

This was an application upon notice of motion, calling upon Mr. W. G. Coulton, of Cape Town (attorney to the defendant Damerell) to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay costs of certain proceedings de bonis propriis.

From the affidavits it appeared that Calmeyer had commenced an action against Damerell to compel him to take transfer of certain property at Rosebank. That action was not proceeded with. The defendant's attorney then gave notice of motion that he would sign judgment against Calmeyer for not proceeding with his action. Subsequently, it appeared Mr. Damerell's attorney had no instructions from his client to take that step, and the matter was withdrawn. Then an application was made to his lordship calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not pay costs de bonis propriis, and a rule was granted.

Mr. M. Bisset was for applicant; Dr. Greer was for respondent.

A considerable number of affidavits were read, and Dr. Greer having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, A. C. J., humorously commented upon the somewhat ludicrous change of front which had been undergone by counsel for the respondent between the previous hearing and the present one. He said that the costs of the original application, which was entered by the respondent and afterwards withdrawn by him, having been incurred through a totally unauthorised action on his part, the rule which had been granted calling upon him to show cause why he should not pay the costs personally would be made absolute. Respondent said that it was due to a misunderstanding that he applied for leave to sign judgment against Calmeyer, and if there was nothing more than a misunderstanding, then he must pay the costs of his misunderstanding.

Ex parte KEY.

Mr. Roux moved on behalf of petitioner, a notary public, of Indwe, for leave to register a certain ante-nuptial contract entered into between clients.

Order granted as prayed, His Lordship remarking that the attorney ought to pay costs of the application.

KREFFER V. SALKINDER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of defendant in the suit, for leave to sign judgment against the plaintiff for not proceeding with his action within the time required by the Rules of Court. Order granted accordingly.

Ex parte EXECUTOR OF ESTATE WILSON.

Mr. Baily moved, on behalf of the executor in the estate of the late Alexander Wilson, of Wynberg, for leave to mortgage certain property.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE WORDON.

Mr. Van Zyl moved, on the petition of the minor heir, for an order authorising the payment of certain award and moneys to provide for petitioner's education at Graham's Town, and to pay taxed bills of costs of certain proceedings. The matter arose out of the well-known Wordon will case, in which W. L. Scott and two others were proceeded against on a charge of being concerned in forging the will of the late Samuel Wordon, and were acquitted. The heir under the will now asked for certain payments to be made from the fund standing to his credit in order to pay the reward of £100 to Scott for discovering the will in question, as promised in an advertisement issued by Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissinne. Petitioner had also incurred certain costs in connection with an action which he instituted to clear himself from the imputation of illegitimacy, the said action having been settled. He desired further sums to be paid out for his benefit, as he was being educated at Graham's Town, and was intending to proceed to the South African College, with a view of becoming an advocate of this Court.

The matter was referred to the Master for report.

Ex parte KILLINGSWORTH.

Mr. Gardiner moved, on the petition of the husband, who resides in Cape Town, for leave to sue his wife by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce.

Leave granted, citation to be served personally on the respondent, and to be returnable on December 31, with leave to applicant to serve intendit and notice of trial, with citation.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

WHEELER V. LOGAN. { 1905.
Nov. 1st.

This was an action to recover the sum of £57, made up by £54, which the plaintiff claimed in respect of expenses incurred in qualifying himself to give evidence in a certain arbitration of Logan and the Colonial Government, and £3 in respect of his appearance as a witness.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a contractor residing at Maitland, and the defendant a merchant residing at Cape Town. About November and December, 1903, the plaintiff made certain measurements and quantities at the request of the defendant, and gave evidence as to the amount of compensation to be allowed.

The defendant, in his plea, admitted that the plaintiff was entitled to £3 as witness's expenses. He duly tendered the said sum, and repeated the tender. He denied that the plaintiff made measurements for which he was entitled to any payment at the request of the defendant. The defendant further denied that the plaintiff made any measurements or valuation, or, if he did, he did so before he gave evidence at the Court.

Mr. Benjamin was for the plaintiff, and Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), was for the defendant.

Thomas Wheeler, railway contractor, of Maitland, plaintiff in the case, said he was asked by the defendant to give evidence with regard to an expropriation in 1903. Witness saw the defendant in his office, when he was asked to give evidence. Nothing was said then about the measurements. The Court, at Matjesfontein had no measurements and adjourned in order that measurements might be taken. The defendant approached him and asked witness to proceed to Touws River to measure the quarry, the brickfields, and the buildings, which had been expropriated by the Government. The defendant's manager, Mr. Wright, and his solicitor, Mr. Kayser, also asked witness to go to Touws River for the same purpose. Shortly afterwards a Mr. Ellis told witness that he was to accompany him and assist in the measuring. From Wednesday until Saturday he was engaged on the measurements. On Saturday Mr. Ellis received a wire, which, however, had been lost. The telegram was to the effect that witness and Ellis were to proceed to Cape Town to give evidence before the Court. The survey was not completed; it would have taken three weeks or a month to do it. Witness was called by the other side at the commission to be further cross-examined, and the defendant's representative objected. He considered five guineas a day a fair and reasonable charge for measuring, and the balance of his claim was made up of the time lost from the time he left for Touws River until the commission concluded its sittings in Cape Town.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Witness denied that he volunteered to go up merely to give evidence on the brickfields. He was examined at the commission about his knowledge of brickfields and quarries. The Court might have adjourned for the information requested from the Government. He did not know that Mr. Marais, the surveyor, went and collected all the information which the Court wanted. Mr. Kayser did not tell him that he was not wanted at Touws River. The defendant, Mr. Wright, and Mr. Kayser asked him to take the measurements.

[Hopley, J.: What were you doing at that time?]

Witness: I was busy on my concession on the train from Maitland to Bellville.

Sir H. Juta: Will you produce your books to show that you were busy?

Witness: I will.

Sir H. Juta: Do so at two o'clock.

Witness: Yes.

Re-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He could not have given evidence as to the value of the site expropriated without making measurements.

John Brown Ellis, railway engineer, Touws River, said he went with the party to Matjesfontein, and was approached by Mr. Logan and his manager, Mr. Wright, to go to Touws River. They told him that Mr. Wheeler would accompany him. They were engaged until the Saturday, when he received a telegram, asking him to be at the court on Monday.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

For the defence,

Charles Marais, a Government land surveyor, said he was engaged by Mr. Logan, and went up to Matjesfontein.

Certain information was required at Touws River, and he and Mr. Ellis were sent down. Mr. Wheeler was there, but witness knew nothing about his coming down. Witness got some measurements, and certain valuations were made. He left that night, and there was then nothing left undone, but Ellis and Wheeler said they were not going to hurry down. He did not ask Ellis to stay. Witness got Wheeler to make a second valuation.

Hon. J. D. Logan, defendant, stated that he was plaintiff in the action that went before the Privy Council. The plaintiff came to see witness, and expressed the wish to go to Matjesfontein.

[Hopley, J.: You didn't take him down as a friend?]

He came down more as a friend than a witness, my lord.

Continuing, witness denied that the plaintiff was instructed to go down to take measurements.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He knew the plaintiff previously as a friend, who insisted on going with witness on his election tour. He would swear that he never paid the plaintiff a penny in his life. The plaintiff was never asked to come up and give evidence. The plaintiff was going as a friend in the first place, and as a witness in the second. After his evidence was heard, counsel advised witness that his evidence was useless. All he knew of the plaintiff was that he was a persistent person in election matters. It was absolutely untrue that he sent the plaintiff down to Touws River to take measurements. He was not surprised at the letter from Mr. Ellis refusing twenty-five guineas in connection with his services, in which he pointed out that he was engaged with Mr. Wheeler.

John Kayser, attorney, in charge of the defendant's interests in the arbitration, and who went up to Matjesfontein, stated that the arbitrators adjourned on the first day for certain information from the Government. The plaintiff was not instructed by witness to take measurements. Witness was under the impression that the plaintiff, merely continuing his outing, went away with Ellis. Witness, taking the average of drink consumed, would put the plaintiff down for eleven shillings for the two days.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Wright came to witness, and said that the plaintiff was worrying him to go to Touws River. While he would not have hesitated in spending money to obtain corroborative evidence, he certainly would not have selected the plaintiff.

Samuel Wright stated that in 1903 he was manager for Mr. Logan. The plaintiff was not asked by witness to come to Matjesfontein. He never heard of instructions given to Wheeler to go down to Touws River. The plaintiff said to witness: "I hear Ellis is going down to Touws River, and I would like to go," and although Mr. Kayser did not want him, witness told him that he might go. It was quite possible that he did send a wire to Ellis, but certainly not to Wheeler.

Cross-examined: The plaintiff came to him, and said he was going up as a witness.

[Hopley, J.: He let the plaintiff go with Ellis merely to please him.]

[Hopley, J.: What was the great obligation that you should please him?] - He appeared to be very friendly with Mr. Logan.

Sir H. Juta closed his case, and counsel having been heard in argument on the facts, Hopley, J.: I regret very much to see this case brought before this Court, when it might have been settled in the Magistrate's Court. Though the matter of friendship may have been the dominant factor in the mind of Mr. Logan, the fact remains that the plaintiff did give evidence as a witness, with certain qualifications. The letter from Mr. Wright, the then general manager for Mr. Logan, clearly treats him as a witness. His evidence was that of a person who affected to know about bricks, quarries, clay, etc. I have no doubt it was in the mind of the defendant that the plaintiff was a valuable witness. The matter was clearly left in the hands of Wright, and Wright had the power to bind Logan. I believe when Ellis and the plaintiff were left behind, the plaintiff or his agents were well aware of it. It is a pity that the plaintiff did not go before the Magistrate and ask for a small sum. I personally think that, considering all the expenses were paid both ways, the utmost I can allow is a couple of pounds for the three days. I find he was working. The judgment of the Court will be for the sum of £6, along with the £3 tendered, with Magistrate's Court costs.

Mr. Benjamin and Sir H. Juta having been further heard on the question of costs, Hopley, J., allowed the matter to stand over for affidavits as regards costs.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys: Moore and Son; Defendant's Attorneys: Van Zyl and Buissinné.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS. { 1905.
Nov. 2nd.

Mr. Russell moved for the admission of Frederick Wm. Beyers as an advocate.

Application granted, and oath administered.

Mr. De Waal moved for the admission of W. H. de Villiers as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

Mr. Roux moved for the admission of C. W. A. Coulter as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

HOULDER BROS. V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.

This was an application upon notice of motion, calling upon the plaintiffs in the action (Houlder Bros.) to show cause why the trial should not be postponed, and why they (plaintiffs) should not be ordered to pay costs of the application. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C. and Mr. Burton), was for applicants; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Close and Mr. Struben), was for respondents.

Mr. Schreiner said that the matter was of some urgency, as the trial had been set down for hearing to-morrow (Friday).

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: The application has not been put down on the roll. It seems to me to be neglect on the part of the attorney. The matter was moved in Chambers some weeks ago.]

Mr. Schreiner: For postponement?

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Yes.]

Mr. Schreiner: I do not know why it should not be set down.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Neglect, purely neglect. However, I will hear you, Mr. Schreiner.]

Mr. Schreiner read an affidavit by Mr. Reid, attorney, who said that a commission had been despatched to London, but up to the present the evidence which was to be taken on commission had not arrived from England, and it was uncertain when it would arrive. The case had been set down for hearing by the plaintiffs' attorney on the 3rd November.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that he wished to withdraw the remarks he had made in regard to the neglect of the attorney. He found that he was under a misapprehension, and that the case he had in mind was that of the liquidators of the Grand Junction Railway and Walker.

Sir H. Juta submitted that, as the case had now been standing over for a considerable time, the defendants should be put to terms.

The trial was ordered to be set down for Wednesday, the 14th February, costs to be costs in the cause.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

WILSON V. GLYNN. { 1905.
Nov. 2nd.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be superseded.

Provisional order superseded.

KEMP BROS. V. SCOTLAND.

Mr. Russell moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Order granted.

ALVERBACK V. DAVIDS.

Dr. Greer moved for provisional sentence for £52, upon a judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court, with costs, and for certain property in Cape Town, registered in the defendant's name, to be declared executable.

Defendant appeared, and denied that he owed the money, which was alleged to be due on a promissory note.

Buchanan, A. C. J. (to defendant): The judgment of the Resident Magistrate's Court still stands. I can't help you now. Judgment will be given as prayed, and the property declared executable.

NETTLESHIP V. GARTON.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £7,000, due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

RATHFELDER V. OTTO AND SCHMIDT.

Mr. Struben moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £250, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

OHLSSON'S BREWERIES V. HALVORSEN.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment for £128, and certain smaller sums. Counsel said that he had received a copy of an affidavit, sworn by defendant, in which she said that she had been unable to meet the debt because of delay in receiving certain remittances. Deponent also said that she was a heavy loser by a recent lawsuit, in which she was the plaintiff. Defendant added that she was unable to appear to answer the summons on account of illness.

Decree granted.

VON HOLDT V. GARTON.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence for £189 5s. upon certain conditions of sale, together with interest and costs.

Order granted.

ADLER V. TUCHTEN.

This was an application for provisional sentence upon three bills of exchange for £23 4s. 10d., £26 1s., and £50 12s. 11d., respectively.

Mr. Joubert moved.

Counsel said that half an hour before the Court opened he was served with an affidavit by the defendant, and after that affidavit had been heard he would, if it was thought necessary, ask for the postponement of the case to enable the plaintiff to file answering affidavits.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan (for defendant) said that the plaintiff should make up his mind either to apply for a postponement or go on with the case.

Mr. Joubert said that he did not apply for a postponement at the present stage.

Mr. Buchanan read an affidavit by defendant, who said that he had a counter-claim against the plaintiff, and that he had tendered and again tendered the balance of £10 7s. 9d., due to the plaintiff. Defendant alleged that he was entitled to a credit of £43 odd, in respect of certain liquor sent by the plaintiff to him, which had been confiscated by the Customs authorities at Port Elizabeth, on the ground of a breach of the Merchandise Marks Act.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts,

Buchanan, A.C.J., gave judgment for the plaintiff for £28 7s. 9d., and said that plaintiff must go into the principal case for the balance of his claim.

ESTATE WITTE V. SCHMIDT.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence on two mortgage bonds for £150 and £100 respectively, with interest, bonds having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

WILKINSON V. LANG AND GLENDINNING

Mr. Gutsche moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £190, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the terms of the bond; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

MALYON V. MAZZIN. { 1905.
Nov. 2nd.

Mr. Payne moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for balance of account.

Order granted.

EAGLE V. WILLIAMS AND BATHGATE.

Mr. Sutton moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £121 11s. 6d., goods sold and delivered, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Order granted.

PHILIPS V. ZIEMAN.

Dr. Greer moved for judgment under Rule 319, in default of plea, for £16, being wages due, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Order granted.

CAPE TIMES V. STEVENSON.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £100 6s. 2d., goods sold and delivered.

Order granted.

LOUW V. LOUW.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment under Rule 319 for an order against defendant, calling upon him to render full and correct account of the proceeds of a certain sale, supported by vouchers and for data. Defendant had acted as auctioneer.

Mr. Close said that, on behalf of the defendant, who resided at Calvinia, he wished to move for leave to purge default.

Mr. Benjamin said that notice of the defendant's application was only served on plaintiff's attorney that morning.

He contended that his client was now entitled to judgment.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Do you apply for a postponement?]

Mr. Benjamin: Not unless the affidavit is one of merits?

Mr. Close read an affidavit by defendant's attorney.

Leave was granted to defendant to purge default, and he was directed to file his plea within seven days, costs of the motion to be paid by defendant.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL V. LEWIS.

Mr. Gutsche moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £111 11s. 8d. and £34, for municipal rates.

Order granted.

CAPE TIMES, LTD. V. WILLIAMS.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £68 3s. 6d., advertising charges, with interest a tempore morae and costs.

Order granted.

CAMPBELL AND CO. V. DRUMMOND.

Mr. Lewis moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £13 11s. 6d., account for goods sold and delivered, and for rent. Counsel added that an interdict had been obtained against defendant restraining the payment of damages to him by one Bailey.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones said that there was a motion in the list at the instance of Messrs. J. C. Juta and Co. with regard to an interdict granted against the proceeds of the judgment.

Defendant said that he had a good answer to the claim of Campbell and Co., and he desired to enter appearance. He was served with the summons on Saturday last, and he understood that he was allowed six days within which to enter appearance.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that the plaintiff's application was premature. The matter must stand over. The motion as to the interdict would come on in the ordinary course.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the rehabilitation of Louis Lionel Goldsmid.

Granted.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for the rehabilitation of Mores Lynn and Abe Wistaff, trading as Lynn and Wistaff.

Granted.

Mr. Lewis moved for the discharge from insolvency of Frederick Pratt.

Granted.

Ex parte SEPTEMBER AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Benjamin moved, as a matter of urgency, on the petition of two sons of Samson September and his late wife, Caroline September, members of the Baca tribe, for an interdict restraining their father from marrying a second time, and the Rev. Charles Palma, or any other marriage officer of this colony, from performing the said marriage ceremony, and restraining the said Samson September from parting with the property bestowed upon the petitioners and their brothers by contract entered into between Samson and his first wife, until transfer be given to the petitioners and their brothers of the properties.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that he could not see his way to make an order.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte SERVICE. { 1905.
Nov. 2nd.

Mr. Bailey moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Granted.

SAWKINS V. HEDDON.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved to have an award of arbitrators made a Rule of Court. The matter had been before the Court in September, but had been postponed to enable a copy of the notice to be served on the defendant.

The application was granted.

DE WAAL V. DE WAAL.

Mr. Gutsche, on behalf of the defendant, submitted to judgment in terms of consent paper put in. Judgment in terms of consent.

WESTBROOK V. MARTYN.

Mr. Close moved on behalf of the applicant, who is plaintiff in a case to be heard in the court for the appointment of a commission de bene esse to take the evidence of the plaintiff.

Dr. Greer opposed the motion.

An affidavit by Mr. Gee, the plaintiff's attorney, stated that plaintiff, who resided in Johannesburg, found it impossible to come to Cape Town for the trial.

The defendant's affidavit stated that the amount involved was only £37 10s., and would not pay the expenses of a commission.

Mr. Close contended it would be a saving to take the plaintiff, and his witnesses' evidence in Johannesburg.

Dr. Greer held that the plaintiff gave no valid excuse for not coming to Cape Town. The expenses incurred in a commission would be very large.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said the taking of the evidence on commission was to the plaintiff's detriment, and not that of the defendant. The application would be granted. Mr. Smith would be appointed commissioner.

Ex parte MARAIS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order directing the Master to pay out certain money in the estate of Marais minors. The Master's report was favourable subject to the permission of the Court. The application was granted.

Ex parte THE TRUSTEE IN THE INSOLVENT ESTATE OF WHITWORTH AND CO.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an extension of time to file a liquidation account. Granted.

Ex parte COETSER.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the amendment of an order of Court. Transfer of certain property had been granted by the Court, but as there were two parties concerned, and it was not stated to which party the property was transferred, the present application was brought.

A rule nisi calling on objectors to the application was granted.

Ex parte OLIVIER AND WIFE.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the registration in Cape Colony of an ante-nuptial contract drawn in the Orange River Colony.

Granted.

MOHATLA V. MATLA.

Appeals from Native Territories
—Act 26, 1894.

Where the only European interested in a civil suit between certain Transkeian natives was merely an executor; the Court refused leave to appeal from the judgment of the Chief Magistrate.

Mr. Benjamin moved on behalf of the plaintiff for leave to appeal against the judgment of the R.M. of one of the districts in the Transkei. One of the parties was a European, and he took the case to the court of the Chief Magistrate by mistake.

The case was adjourned to enable counsel to look into the Act.

The case was again mentioned later, but was ordered to stand over for further information.

At a still later stage, Mr. Benjamin said that certain questions of native law as to dowry and succession were involved in the matter. The only European interested was an executor.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that this was essentially one of those cases which the Legislature wished to be settled by the Chief Magistrate of the Native Territories. There would be no order on the present application.

Ex parte WILKINSON.

Mr. Gutsche moved, on the petition of Arthur Wilkinson, for leave to sue his wife for divorce in forma pauperis.

Applicant appeared, and said that he was a labourer, but was in irregular work. He was without any property, except a few personal goods. He did not desire to marry again, but wished to get rid of his wife, because of her disgraceful conduct. He desired to have custody of the child of the marriage. His wife was living with her mother at St. Leger-street.

Rule nisi granted, personal service to be effected on respondent, rule to be returnable on the 10th inst.

Ex parte VAN DER MERWE.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the appointment of a fresh trustee to represent an insolvent estate in an action. Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE ROBERTSON.

Mr. Wright moved, on the petition of the executors testamentary in the estate of Alfred George Robertson, for an order for the survey of the property of the legatees, and for the transfer to them of the property, subject to a bond being passed in terms of the will. The property was stated to be situated in the district of George.

Dr. Greer, in the absence of Mr. Searle, K.C., said that he was asked by the attorney in the matter to say that he appeared for the tutor dative, and that he understood the matter was to be postponed.

Ordered to stand over till next motion day.

GOURLAY V. BAUMGARTEN AND JONES.

This was the return day of a rule nisi calling upon the respondents to show cause why the partnership carried on by them in Long-street, Cape Town, as the South African Hackney Lighting Corporation, should not be forthwith placed under liquidation, why they (respondents) should not be restrained from alienating the assets, and why Mr. J. E. P. Close should not be appointed receiver.

From the petition, it appeared that the business carried on by the Corporation was that of acetylene gas lighting. The petitioner had advanced a sum of £1,500, but the business had resulted in considerable losses, and Mr. Gourlay decided that the business should be liquidated before further losses were incurred so as to protect his interests.

Dr. Rainsford was for applicant (William Dixon Gourlay); Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for respondents.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan, on behalf of the first respondent (Henry Baumgarten, now of Umtata), applied for a postponement for a fortnight, to enable him to file affidavits.

Dr. Rainsford read an answering affidavit, in which it was urged that the respondent had had ample opportunity of preparing his defence, seeing that the rule was granted on August 31.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that as the matter had already stood for two months it could stand a fortnight longer.

Respondent must pay costs of postponement. The matter was postponed until November 14.

Ex parte STRYDOM.

Mr. Sutton moved to make absolute a rule nisi, calling upon respondent to show cause why petitioner should not be granted leave to sue for divorce in forma pauperis.

Rule made absolute, Mr. Sutton to act as counsel, and Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne, and Lawton as attorneys for the petitioner.

Ex parte FULLER.

Mr. M. Bisset moved, on behalf of Emily Fuller, a widow, of the Queen's Town district, for the attachment of certain property of Richard Webb, who had left the Court's jurisdiction, and for leave to sue him by edictal citation, in respect of a certain mortgage. The petitioner said that the respondent failed to pay the interest on the bond. The debtor was reported to have been seen in the streets of Johannesburg, but his address was not known to the petitioner.

Leave granted, citation to be served personally, failing which to be published once in the Government "Gazette," and once in the "Star," Johannesburg, and to be returnable on January 12.

Ex parte RETIEF.

Mr. De Waal moved, on the petition of the curatrix bonis in her husband's estate, for leave to expend balance of moneys in her hand, and to raise a mortgage upon certain property.

Order granted.

Ex parte VALENTINE.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to raise a mortgage of £450 upon certain property in Richmond-street, Cape Town.

Order granted.

Ex parte VAN RIET.

Mr. Struben moved for an amendment of plan of sub-division of certain property, so as to enable transfers to be made.

Order granted.

Ex parte DE KLERK.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for leave to pass transfer of defined portions of certain property in the district of Barkly East, petitioner having agreed to a partition of the farms in question.

Order granted.

Ex parte DIAMOND AND WIFE.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for leave to register a certain antenuptial contract, as if the same had been entered into before marriage. The parties were married in 1898. The petition was to the effect that the parties had, from the beginning, intended to have separate estates, but that, through an oversight, they had been married in community. The application had been standing over for further information, which was now furnished by counsel. The marriage took place in this colony immediately after the second petitioner's arrival, and her affidavit set out that she understood the nature of the present application, and voluntarily consented to it. Both parties were possessed of property.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said he thought that the evidence was slight, but still it was sufficient to satisfy the Court that there was a pre-nuptial arrangement that the parties should retain their own property and control over the same, as they would have done if they had been married in England, before coming out to the Colony, under the Married Women's Property Act. Leave would be granted to register the contract as if it had been entered into before marriage, saving all just rights of creditors.

Ex parte SEARLE AND CO.

Mr. Struben moved, on the petition of Edward Searle and Co., carrying on business at Port Elizabeth, for the attachment of certain property in the town of Colesberg, ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and for leave to sue one Morris Bernstein, late of Colesberg, and now of Johannesburg, for £10 5s. 6d., for goods sold and delivered.

Leave was granted to sue as prayed, and one of the erven was ordered to be attached, citation to be served personally on the respondent and to be returnable on the 15th January.

Ex parte ESTATE CRONJE.

Mr. Payne moved for leave to pass transfer of certain property in the district of Barkly East, in accordance with a partition agreed upon.

Order granted.

DR. WILLIAMS MEDICINE COMPANY V. ALEXANDER.

This was an application brought by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, upon notice of motion, calling upon the respondent, a chemist, carrying on business in Caledon-street, Cape Town, to show cause why an interdict should not be granted restraining him from selling, offering, or disposing for sale certain pills other than those of the company with a cover labelled "Pink Pills for Pale People," and restraining him from advertising the same as if they were the pills of the Dr. Williams Medicine Company. Mr. M. Bisset was for applicants; Mr. Molteno was for respondent.

Mr. Bisset, at the outset, said that he desired to call the attention of the Court to a report that the owner of the company was dead. This, however, lacked official confirmation. Counsel proceeded to read an affidavit by James Camerson McKenzie, manager of the South African branch of the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, in which he complained that the respondent was selling pills styled "Pink Pills for Delicate Females." This, he said, was an infringement of the trade-mark of the applicant company, whereby considerable loss and damage was being sustained by them. Counsel said that what the applicant complained of was the use of the words "Pink Pills for Delicate People." The applicants' expression was "Dr. Williams's Pink Pills for Pale People."

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Your trade-mark is not infringed.]

Mr. Bisset: We say that the essential part of our trade-mark is infringed.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: What essential part.]

Mr. Bisset: The use of the words "pink pills."

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: You have nothing about "delicate females" on your labels.]

That is so, but, of course, the sting of the thing lies in the use of the words "pink pills." Counsel proceeded to read affidavits by several persons, who said they had gone to the respondent's shop and asked for "pink pills," and have been supplied with Alexander's own pills. When asked for Dr. William's pink pills, respondent had said that those he had tendered were quite as good.

Mr. Molteno read a number of replying affidavits.

John Henry Cooper, chemist, Plain-street, said that to his knowledge chemists in England sold pink pills other than those of the applicant company.

John C. Smith, chemist, Cape Town, formerly in the employ of Hedges and Co., of Birmingham, said that the applicants some years ago threatened Hedges and Co. with an action for selling pink pills of their own manufacture, but did not go forward with it.

Ernest Glover Alexander (the respondent) denied that he had infringed the applicants' label, and said that it was a common custom in England for chemists to sell pink pills other than those of the applicant company. He claimed that he had a perfect right to sell pink pills other than the applicant company's. He denied that he had represented to the persons who had sworn affidavits on the other side that his pills were superior to the applicants'.

Mr. Bisset having been part heard in argument,

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that as the matter seemed to be likely to take up a considerable time, he would hear the rest of the argument on some future occasion, when an opportunity offered.

Postea (November 15th).

Mr. Bisset continued his argument in support of the application. He said that when the matter was last before the Court he was endeavouring to establish the proposition that the infringement of a trade-mark may consist in the adoption by a rival trader of an essential part of such trade mark, even though the essential part may consist of only one or two words—only one word, for example, as in the Eureka Shirt Case, Ford v. Foster and Porter (7, Law Reports, Chancery Appeals). Counsel quoted at some length from the report of the case. He also cited the Glenfield starch case, Waterspoon v. Currey (Law Reports, 5, House of Lords).

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: What words do you say can be used in this case?]

I should say that respondent could say this. In the first place, he may use the word "pill."

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Couldn't he use the description "pink pills?"]

No; I say not, because "pink pills" is an essential part of our trade mark, and our goods have become known to the trade in this Colony at any rate, as "pink pills."

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Is not your essential part "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills?"]

No; I submit not. If one sees "pink pills" one's mind flies right away to "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

Buchanan, A. C. J.: You claim pink pills as your exclusive right? Nobody else may sell "pink pills" in South Africa?

Nobody else may sell "pink pills," we say, and certainly not under the same collocation as the respondent is selling pills, viz., "pink pills for delicate females." I should say, of course, that applicants could sell "Bland's pills for delicate females."

Mr. Bisset (proceeding) called the attention of the Court to the Transvaal High Court case concerning Khedive cigarettes.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: If "pink pills" is only the description of an article, then you are not entitled to an interdict.]

That is an objection that might have been raised originally before our trade mark was registered. In further argument counsel quoted the Australian case of the "Dog's Head Beer," the English case of Stone Ales (Montgomery v. Thompson appeal cases, 1891) the Yorkshire Relish case (Powell v. Birmingham Vinegar Co., appeal cases, 1897, p. 715). Counsel went on to argue that the description of "pink pills" had come to be specially associated with applicant's pills. Applicants had made those pills famous by wide advertising and, he supposed, by the virtues of the pills.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: The question is whether "pink pills" is a description of a pill. The affidavits of the respondent allege that "pink pills" is a term commonly used among chemists in Great Britain and Ireland, and you have not answered that.]

Mr. Bisset said that the question was what was the user in this country. If the respondent had shown that "pink pills" was a term known to the public in this colony before 1893, when the applicants had their trade mark registered, the case that applicants would have had to meet would have been a very different one. All that the affidavits of respondent said was that the term was in common use in Great Britain and Ireland, but the respondent did not suggest that "pink pills" was a term known to the public out here before 1893, and the applicants said that other chemists such as respondent were now seeking to take advantage of the name and reputation obtained for "pink pills" by the applicants. The primary words "pink pills" may have been merely descriptive at the beginning, but he contended that the words had now obtained a secondary meaning. Counsel went on to refer to the Camel-hair Belting case (14, House of Lords Appeal Cases, 1896, p. 199).

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Can you tell me what you are registered as in England?]

Mr. Bisset said that he did not know. In closing he cited the case of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills v. Tothill.

Mr. Molteno said that this was an attempt on the part of the applicants to appropriate for their own use a portion of the English language. He did not wish for a moment to deny that his learned friend's statement of the law was perfectly correct with regard to the Eureka and the other cases. Those cases, however, went on a settled principle. Those were cases dealing, not with trade marks, but with trade names or fancy names, a totally different thing. Applicants were not entitled to appropriate the generic description of "pink pills." These pills were simply the ordinary ferric oxide pills, and they were pink just as the hydrangea was pink. If they looked at any of the circulars of manufacturing chemists on the continent, in England, or in America, they would find that "pink pills" was a common thing. Dr. Williams' were not the only pink pills in the world. Schultze and Co. of London, advertised "pink pills" in their circulars. This was an attempt which had been overruled time after time of a person trying to get a proprietary right to the English language, trying to trade mark a portion of the English language.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: I could quite understand your argument if you were opposing the registration of the trade mark.]

Mr. Molteno: Then I will come to this, is the defendants' label a colourable imitation of applicant's, calculated to deceive the people? The point is whether by selling "pink pills for delicate females" we infringe the trade mark of "Dr. Williams' pink pills for pale people." All we do is to sell a common article in the chemical trade as "pink pills." We try to sell pink pills not for "pale people"—not for "anæmic people"—but we sell them for "delicate females." I submit that that would not deceive the most anæmic people in the world. Mr. Molteno went on to urge that it was absurd to suppose that "Dr. Williams' pink pills for pale people" had the sole right to use the term "pink pills." He contended that in this case the Court had not to decide a question such as was raised in the previous case of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills v. Tothill. One could conceive a colourable imitation of the applicants' trade mark in the label "Dr. Wilson's Pink Pills." One could understand that the class of people who bought these pills—he believed that there was a large trade amongst coloured people—would not at once detect the difference between "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills" and "Dr. Wilson's Pink Pills."

Buchanan, A. C. J.: The applicants in this case have registered a trade mark under the former Act, and that trade mark still remains in existence. It is clear that the original trade mark is not one that could be registered under the present Act, and the question whether it should or should not have been registered under the previous Act has never been raised. No steps have been taken to have the mark removed from the register, and it stands there as one of the things to which, by registration, the applicants are declared entitled. The trade mark as the registration of a label which begins by describing them as "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People Medicine Co." Now, had this been a question of first impression, I must say I would have hesitated very considerably before saying that this was at all a colourable imitation of the applicants' trade mark which is sold. I cannot help thinking with the affidavits before me that "pink pills" are a common article in the chemists' trade in England, and that pills are called by their coating, pink pills, purple pills, white-coated pills, and so on, but I have before me the previous decision in this case, where, not one Judge, but two Judges of the Supreme Court, sat on this very question. His Lordship, the Chief Justice, who gave judgment in that case, seemed to found his judgment mainly on the fact that the plaintiffs had this registration, and that nobody else is entitled to use the words which are distinctive and descriptive of the applicants' goods. It is true, as Mr. Bisset has argued, that there has been no disclaimer of any word in the trade mark registered, and it might almost be, if you drive his argument to an extreme, that nobody else can sell pills in this country. I hardly think we could go so far as that, because "pills" is a description of an article. The question is whether "pink pills" has obtained such a secondary meaning as to indicate the goods made by the applicants. There is no doubt that pink pills are well-known by advertising, and have become an article of commerce. After referring to what would probably have been the position of the trade mark under the English Acts, his lordship went on to say: I feel bound under the previous decision of this Court, and with the evidence before me, to say that nobody else is entitled to sell "pink pills" as such in this country. They may not describe them as such, because "pink pills" are supposed to be "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills." The goods are made in England as "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills," but the applicants have been shrewd enough to get their trade mark registered in this country, and while that trade mark stands I am bound to keep it in view. The application will be granted as prayed, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

SOEKER V. BLAKE AND HENDRICKS. { 1905.
Nov. 2nd.
„ 3rd.

This was an action in which Lallie Soeker, a livery stable-keeper and speculator, of St. John-street, Cape Town, sought an order releasing him and his property from a certain bond granted in favour of Anna Susanna Blake and Baine Hendricks.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a landed proprietor, residing at Cape Town. The first defendant is a widow, now or heretofore, residing at Paarl. The second defendant is a landed proprietor residing at Cape Town.

2. On the 21st April, 1902, a certain mortgage bond was passed and registered in the Deeds Office, whereby the second defendant acknowledged himself to be indebted to the first defendant in the sum of £6,000, and as security therefor bound as a first mortgage a certain piece of ground situate in the city of Cape Town in Glynville-terrace, at the corner of Hope-street.

3. The said mortgage bond further set forth that the plaintiff bound himself as surety and joint principal debtor for the payment of the said £6,000, such interest as might become due thereon, premiums of insurance and other costs and charges, and that for the security thereof the plaintiff bound as a first mortgage a certain piece of land in the city of Cape Town being part "A" of the land transferred to Barrio Hendricks on the 25th February, 1901, measuring 34 square roods and 45 square feet, and subsequently transferred to the plaintiff on the 19th February, 1902.

4. That portion of the said bond which binds the plaintiff and his property as aforesaid, was passed by virtue of a certain power of attorney, purporting to be granted by the plaintiff in favour of Jan Johan Michau, an attorney-at-law and conveyancer, to be signed by the plaintiff, with his mark, and purporting to authorise the said Michau to appear before the Registrar of Deeds and to bind the plaintiff and his property as aforesaid.

5. The said power of attorney was not granted by the plaintiff and the mark thereon, purporting to be the plaintiff's mark was not put thereon by the plaintiff or with his authority knowledge or consent, and the plaintiff never agreed to bind himself or his property as aforesaid.

6. The said mark was fraudulently put on the said power of attorney by the second defendant, or by someone else on his instructions.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) An order releasing the plaintiff and his property as aforesaid from the said bond. (b) An order directing the Registrar of Deeds to rectify the said bond and the entering thereof in the Debt Register by striking out therefrom all mention of the plaintiff or his property. (c) Alternative relief. (d) Costs of suit.

The defendant's plea denied the forgery, alleging that the plaintiff put his signature to the power of attorney.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Roux) for plaintiff. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for first defendant; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. Van Zyl) for second defendant.

The plaintiff stated he was a livery-stable keeper, and resided in St. John-street. He owned a considerable quantity of property, and had had several speculations with Hendricks. Mr. Chiappini acted as witness's agent. Witness did not agree to go surety for Hendricks on a £6,000 bond. Witness did not authorise anybody to put his mark to it. Witness discovered that he was surety when on one occasion he wanted £1,000, and went to Mr. Chiappini, who told him he could not advance the amount. Witness considered he was worth £1,000, and took his papers to a Mr. Woolf, who informed him that he owed £32,000. It was on that occasion he first discovered there was a bond for £6,000.

In cross-examination by Mr. Searle, witness denied that he had signed any document to pass transfer.

Louis Cerfontein stated he knew both the plaintiff and Hendricks. Witness was clerk to the latter, who brought him the document to sign as a witness in April, 1902. Soerker's mark was not there at the time. Witness did not see Soerker put his mark to the power of attorney when witness signed it.

By Mr. Searle: He was in Hendricks' employ when he signed the document. The paper was folded up, and what he signed was perfectly blank—that was the portion of the document shown to him.

By Mr. Upington: He had the strictest confidence in Hendricks, and therefore he signed his name without asking any questions. For all he knew, it might have been a confession of murder. It was never explained to him that he was witnessing a mark when he put his name to the power of attorney. When he went to see Mr. Woolf early in the year, he did not point out that his initials on the document were forgeries.

Courteney Cromack, clerk in the office of the Register of Deeds, produced the bonds.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Barrie Hendricks, the second defendant, stated that in 1902 he purchased a certain property adjoining the one that was mortgaged. He wanted a loan to proceed with building operations, and Soerker consented to go as security. Thereupon witness gave certain instructions to Chiappini Bros. The money was advanced from time to time as the building proceeded. Witness signed the power of attorney in Mr. Chiappini's office, and went in search of the plaintiff. He saw the plaintiff talking to Taffie, and when witness showed him the document, Soerker, Taffie, and witness, at the former's suggestion, went to witness's house. Soerker made his mark on the security bond in the presence of the witnesses. He would swear that Soerker put his mark there in the presence of the witnesses. If the bond was called up, he would be able to pay it at present. In 1902 he owned considerable property; he was not pushed for money, and he could have raised it elsewhere. Since then he had accommodated Soerker to an amount of over £2,000. Both the plaintiff and Omar were in difficulties. Witness saw the thing coming on through the racehorses. The document was handed to Cerfontein open.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: If Soerker had refused to go as security, witness could have got the money on his other property. He could not say who gave Chiappini Bros. authority to use Soerker's name as security before the 26th March. Cerfontein, witness would swear positively, signed the document.

Alexander John Chiappini, partner in the firm of Chiappini Bros., acted for the plaintiff and the second defendant, in business for a number of years, stated until recently Soerker and Hendricks were on the best of terms. Hendricks required a loan of £6,000 on the buildings. Witness made arrangements to have the power of attorney signed. The following day Hendricks, who signed the power, said that he could not find Soerker. Hendricks subsequently returned with Soerker's mark, and the signatures of two witnesses. The plaintiff had frequently signed as security for Hendricks. Soerker came to his office later on, and wanted money to pay the liabilities of Hadje Omar, and witness reminded him that he had already gone as security for Hendricks, and witness then gave him a cheque for £150. Soeker was constantly getting money of witness. In March this year Soeker wanted £1,000, to pay certain liabilities of Arend's. Witness said it was impossible to raise that amount of money, taking it for granted that Soeker, who offered no landed property as security, knew all about the mortgage of £6,000 on his property. Soeker further suggested the pledging of certain race-horses, but when witness spoke of having them taken to stables at Wynberg, the plaintiff dropped the conversation. Soeker begged of witness to assist him as he was being summoned, and witness advanced him £160.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: When Hendricks wanted the money he had no unbonded property. If he had sold his property at the time he would have had £1,500 over his bonds. Several powers were signed in the presence of other witnesses, and he did not think it necessary to have this power with £6,000 concerned signed in his presence.

Allie Taffie, building foreman, said he was present with Soeker, when Hendricks came up with the document to sign. Soeker said all right, and suggested going round to the house to sign the paper. Hendricks, in the house, called the two witnesses, and told them that they must sign as witnesses to Soeker's mark. Soeker put his mark to the paper, and then the witnesses signed.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: Witness was a relative of Hendricks. Witness was at work when Hendricks came up, and beyond having a cup of tea he did not know why he was brought round to the house as he could not write.

Hannah Hendricks, wife of the second defendant, stated that she saw Soeker put his mark to a document in her husband's house a little more than three years ago. After that the two witnesses signed the papers.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gardiner: She had been married according to Malay rites for a number of years, and was re-married before a Magistrate this year, when her husband settled on her a number of horses and carriages, and a quantity of property after she had signed an ante-nuptial contract.

James Robert Munnik, clerk in the employment of Messrs. Chiappini Bros., stated he witnessed a power to pass a mortgage bond for £3,000 in May, 1902. It was not allowed in the office to witness the signature of a man who was not present.

Francis Chiappini, partner in the firm of Chiappini Bros., stated it was a rule of the office not to witness any signature except it was written at the time.

Mr. Uppington closed his case.

Mr. Searle called witnesses to give formal evidence as to the bonds passed between Soeker and Hendricks, and as to the passing of the bond in question.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

Maasdorp, J.: Before dealing with the circumstances directly connected with the transaction in question, it would be well to ascertain the personal relations that existed at that time between Soeker and Hendricks. I am satisfied that the relationship was of the most friendly character. It seems also that they accommodated one another on several occasions with their signatures. Of course, it may be said that this relationship Hendricks took advantage of in order to obtain irregular assistance in funds. Hendricks at that time was not in such difficulties that it was necessary to have recourse to irregularities in order to obtain funds. Of the two disinterested witnesses in the case there is nothing to choose between Cerfontein and Taffie, and consequently their credibility has to be tested. His lordship, after reviewing the evidence, accepted that of Mr. Chiappini, which he said disposed of the evidence given by Cerfontein, and he gave judgment for the defendants, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

WOOD V. SHERWOOD. { 1905.
Nov. 3rd.
" 7th.

This was an action brought by John Henry Wood, of Claremont, a former Mayor of Muizenberg, against E. J. Sherwood, of Observatory, a member of the Mowbray Municipal Council, to recover cession of a policy of insurance, and damages in the sum of £100.

From the pleadings, it appeared that the matter in dispute went back to the early '80's, prior to either party coming out to the Cape. Defendant became surety to a firm named Wood Bros. for the plaintiff's running account, and in or about September, 1884, plaintiff handed to him, by way of security, a policy of insurance upon his life for £400 with the Standard Life Assurance Company. Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that he made payments to defendant in full discharge of the liabilities undertaken by defendant, thus entitling him to the return of the policy and the cession. Defendant had returned the policy, but not the cession, although demands had repeatedly been made upon defendant in regard to the latter. He prayed for (1) an order for the return of the cession; (2) judgment for £100, as and for damages; and (3) costs of suit.

Defendant, in his plea, said that in July, 1888, plaintiff and defendant arrived at a settlement, whereby it was mutually agreed that plaintiff should pay to defendant the sum of £200, and that the said policy then held by defendant, with the rights therein, should become defendant's property out and out, and remain absolutely vested in him, plaintiff further undertaking, in lieu of paying interest on his indebtedness to defendant, to pay the premiums of insurance. Plaintiff paid £200, but such payment was not in full discharge of the liability of the defendant under the surety. The policy was handed to plaintiff, who was leaving for England, on his undertaking to pay the balance due to defendant of £390. Plaintiff neither on his return nor thereafter paid such amount, nor any part thereof, and it still remained due and owing. Defendant was still ready and willing, and tendered to deliver to plaintiff the said cession, on payment of the said amount (£390), now due to him. He prayed that the claim might be dismissed, with costs. In reconvention, defendant claimed an order that plaintiff hand over to him the said policy, and continue to pay the premiums from time to time as they fall due, or, alternatively, payment of the said sum of £390, with interest a tempore morae, and costs.

Plaintiff, in his replication, denied that he undertook to pay defendant the sum of £390, or any part thereof, or that he owed defendant any sum. For a plea to the claim in reconvention, he said that he had discharged all indebtedness that defendant might have had under the bond, and he prayed that the claim in reconvention might be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan) for plaintiff; Mr. McGregor (with him Mr. Lewis) for defendant.

John Henry Wood (plaintiff) said that he was formerly a miller in Alford Lincolnshire. Wood Bros., whose principal business was in Hull at that time, supplied him with foreign wheat. In 1879 defendant came to his place in Alford, and said that he was very much pressed for money, and asked witness for a loan of £100. He had known defendant from being a youth, having been boys together. When they grew up, they married two sisters. Witness told defendant that he could not afford to lend him any money, because there was a great difficulty at the time in buying foreign wheat. They had had five successive bad harvests. Witness, however, agreed that if defendant would be security for him for foreign wheat, he would find him £100. Sherwood agreed to become surety for two bills of £250 each. Witness could not give defendant more than £60. When the bills became due, witness met them. Defendant entered into a deed of surety with Wood Bros. Some time during 1879 or 1880, he entered into a separate bond as a general security for witness's account. Witness remained in England until 1881. When he left, they had had a succession of bad harvests, and in order to secure Mr. Sherwood as his surety, witness gave him a second mortgage on the will and property, which he held, but unfortunately that mortgage was advertised in the London "Gazette" as a bill of sale. Witness did not go into insolvency. He let the business to a local miller, and advertised the mortgagees of the property, with the consent of Mr. Sherwood. The result of the bill being advertised in the "Gazette" was that his creditors, Wood Bros., became anxious about their account. From time to time after he had come to the Cape, he received dunning letters from the defendant with regard to his indebtedness, and afterwards he received letters from Sutcliffe and Sutcliffe.

Mr. Benjamin put in a bundle of correspondence, going down to 1888. In that year the proposal was made that plaintiff should pay £200 absolutely, and that on payment at any time within twelve months of another £100, the policy should be handed back to him.

Witness (continuing his evidence) said that he paid the sum of £300 as agreed upon, making the final payment on September 6, 1890. In 1890 the policy was handed back to him by defendant. Witness went to England in 1897, and waited upon Sutcliffe and Sutcliffe with regard to the state of his account with Wood Bros. He was given a receipt by Sutcliffe and Sutcliffe. The cession had been the cause of a long-standing quarrel. Witness was in some difficulties in 1903. It was not until then that he made his discovery that the cession had not been given back to him. Defendant, on demand being made upon him, first agreed to hand the cession over to witness's son, and afterwards to hand it over to his trustees, but he failed to give up the cession. Witness discovered that defendant had been attempting to raise money on the policy. Witness spoke to an interview which afterwards took place between himself, Mr. Sherwood and Mr. Andrews, when the defendant claimed that witness had only paid £250 and that he was not entitled to the £100. Witness, who was in a rage, replied: "If that is the case, give him the money, if I can't have it honourable I won't have it at all." From time to time he had applications from the defendant for sums of money from 1891 to 1901. From 1890 to 1904 there was no intimation on the part of the defendant that witness was indebted to him in any way. Between 1890 and 1897 he decided to lend anything to the defendant because the latter would not give him a free discharge. From 1897 onwards he had continually lent to the defendant money up to large amounts. "In fact," said witness with warmth, "he has also been the torment of my life."

Mr. Benjamin read a series of letters couched in very fraternal terms which had passed years ago between the parties, plaintiff being visibly affected when the correspondence was read. Many of the letters contained applications by defendant for financial help.

Witness (in further evidence) said that he had paid all the premiums on the policy.

Cross-examined by Mr. McGregor: Witness had a good memory sometimes. He had been in a rage several times because of defendant's conduct. He was not bad tempered. He did not think that he had threatened personal violence to Mr. Sherwood. He did not remember saying recently to the defendant that if he (plaintiff) lost the case, Sherwood would have to suffer, even if he (witness) had to swing for it. Witness took exception to a misrepresentation made by the defendant to the insurance company. When he wanted to raise money on the policy, defendant represented that witness had consented to it. That was what witness referred to when he spoke in one of his letters about the matter taking a "criminal aspect."

Mr. McGregor: Have you used very positive epithets towards Mr. Sherwood.

Witness (with some feeling): I have called him almost everything that I could think of from time to time, because I have been so much annoyed by him.

Further cross-examined: Witness came out to this country in October, 1881.

In further cross-examination, witness said that defendant persecuted him from the very day he arrived in this colony in regard to the bond.

Mr. McGregor wanted to put a letter to witness to refresh his memory on a certain point.

Witness (bitterly): I don't want to see it; I am so sick of the whole thing.

In answer to the Court: Witness said that Wood Bros. died soon after he had given up doing business with them.

Further cross-examined: Years ago witness had asked the defendant for a statement of what he had paid to the firm of Wood Bros. He had threatened in one of the letters to remove beyond the reach of the defendant.

Mr. McGregor: Why did you threaten to go beyond his reach?

Witness: Because he was persecuting me. I would go to the ends of the earth rather than be persecuted, and I would go further if possible! Witness paid £20 to Sherwood's solicitors in England for a complete statement of the account, and in 1897 he made a full and final settlement. He had lent thousands of pounds since then to Sherwood. It was with Sherwood's consent that he came out to this colony. He did not see Sherwood before he embarked from Hull, because Sherwood was in London at that time. He admitted that it would have been better if he had inquired before he left England what his indebtedness to Wood Bros. was. It would have saved him a life-time of agony.

Mr. McGregor: Mr. Sherwood was in difficulties in 1879?

Witness: I have never known him out of difficulties, and I have known him since he was a boy.

Further cross-examined: A great many of witness's papers had been destroyed by the fire at his mill in Plain-street.

By the Court: Witness based his claim on the settlement arrived at with defendant's solicitors, Messrs. Sutcliffe and Sutcliffe, in July, 1888. Messrs. Sutcliffe wrote saying that they were willing to accept £300, paid in terms set out, and he agreed, paying the sum of £300 in full and final settlement. The amount of £300 was agreed to as a compromise. He sent £100 and three sums of £50, and paid the balance of £50 to the Sherwoods on their arrival in this colony in October, 1890. Sherwood used often to complain that he had paid £500, £600, or £1,000, and as witness was in good circumstances, he offered to pay to defendant anything more that might be owing to him. Witness said to defendant: "If you can prove that you have paid the amount of money that you allege, I will give you £1,000 and principal and interest." There had been a lot of trouble in the family, because some believed witness and others believed Sherwood.

Douglas Francis Mautry, clerk in the employ of the Bank of Africa, gave evidence as to certain drafts drawn by plaintiff in favour of defendants.

David R. Andrew, district manager for the Western Province of the Standard Life Company, said that the premiums had been paid up to July last, and the policy was still alive, although the premium for 1906 was now due. Witness was waited upon this year by Sherwood, and asked what loan value would be given on the policy. Witness inquired from the head office, and was informed that the loan value was £126. It was a regulation of the office that both the holder and the cessionary of the policy should sign a bond if a loan were granted. Sherwood, on being asked if Wood was willing to sign the bond, said that he was. Wood afterwards called at the office, and objected to any loan being granted on the policy. Witness had in the meantime communicated with Johannesburg, and at the time Wood called a cheque and two bonds were in the company's office. There was an interview subsequently with Sherwood and Wood, at which the latter lost his temper.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

E. J. Sherwood (defendant) was then called. About 1880, he said, he went with plaintiff to Wood Bros., of Hull, gave him a letter of credit, and lent him £1,000. He denied that about that time he received a loan from plaintiff. Plaintiff gave him a second mortgage on his mill property for £500. He failed to meet his second bill. Witness made several payments to Wood Bros. When plaintiff's bills fell due he called upon witness to pay as much as he could to meet the bills. Witness scraped together all the loose cash that he could find and handed it over to Wood.

[Hopley, J.: Without any receipt?]

Witness: I simply handed it over to Wood. He would come to me and say: "Look here, there is a bill to meet," and I gave him so much towards it.

[Hopley, J.: How much?]

That I cannot tell you.

[Hopley, J.: Do you want us to believe that you handed over this money without getting any acknowledgment?]

I got acknowledgments.

[Hopley, J.: Where are they?]

I have not got the acknowledgments now, I never troubled about them. The second bill that was met was met through the selling of my furniture when I was away in London.

Witness (continuing) said that he transferred the rents of his property in Manchester for plaintiff's benefit.

Mr. McGregor: Did you get a statement of account between J. H. Wood and Wood Bros?

Witness: Certainly, as soon as Wood ran away I got that.

Mr. McGregor: What became of that statement?

Witness: I sent it after him to South Africa. Continuing, he said that when he could not go on paying cash, he passed a bond in favour of Wood Bros. Subsequently he surrendered the bond Wood had given him, for the sake of his (plaintiff's) father and mother. Wood took particular care not to see witness before he went to South Africa. Wood could have met him in Hull, where he started from, and where witness was. He (defendant) ran all over the town trying to find him, but he did not succeed. The first news he had of Wood's whereabouts he received from his (witness's) wife.

[Hopley, J. (interposing): What is all this about? Do you want to impute dishonesty?]

No, not dishonesty.

[Hopley, J.: Then what is all the trouble about?]

I think he might have made some arrangement about the payment of his account.

[Hopley, J.: But that was arranged by you having taken it over?]

I did not take it over with the intention of having the account to pay.

[Hopley, J.: You must have been young in those days.]

Witness (in further evidence) said that he had expended on behalf of the plaintiff £600 odd, apart from legal expenses.

[Hopley, J.: Of course, you will produce documents to show this expenditure?]

Witness replied that he could not produce any such documents.

[Hopley, J.: Then hadn't we better come down to the settlement of '88, and leave this ancient history alone? The important date is '88.]

Witness (continuing) said that when the agreement of '88 was made witness was in England. Plaintiff did not pay the first £200 within three years. He did not avail himself of the option. Witness received £100, and two drafts of £50 each, but he got no more payments either by draft or note. Witness did not hand the policy to defendant in 1890, but it remained in his possession until 1897.

He handed the policy to the plaintiff in 1897, when the latter went to England. Plaintiff said that he wanted the policy for a purpose, but witness knew that he was not wanting to raise money, because he was in funds. Wood said that he had got plenty of money, and he was going to the Old Country, and was going to square up all his old debts. He was going to see Wood Bros. and Sutcliffe, witness's solicitors, and see how much he (defendant) had paid on his behalf. He promised on his return to pay to witness all that he (Sherwood) had paid to Wood Bros., with interest. Witness gave plaintiff the policy, but he told plaintiff that he would keep the cession. Witness knew that plaintiff could not raise money on the policy.

[Hopley, J.: What was the good of taking that policy to England?]

It was no good to him, only he seemed to have had a fad to have it in his possession.

[Hopley, J.: What good could it be to him?]

No good whatever financially; I knew that.

[Hopley, J.: What was the fad Here is a man with thousands to his credit in the bank at the time. Why should he have this particular fad?]

I cannot tell you. I must leave the Court to decide.

[Hopley, J.: That is what the Court wants to know. The Court has to decide on the probabilities when two gentlemen like yourselves contradict each other and call each other a liar, and say that you are mistaken?]

I have given the true statement of what passed between us.

Witness (in further evidence) said that he sent a letter to Sutcliffe giving plaintiff a full discharge from all legal claim. He took it that expression did not mean that the policy had been redeemed. When plaintiff returned from England, he flourished the receipt about, and put it in front of witness's wife and children. He said to witness: "I have got you; you have given a discharge." After the policy was handed to witness, plaintiff continued to pay the premiums. In regard to the attempt to raise a loan on the policy, witness said that he had the consent of plaintiff to raise a loan. One day plaintiff called at his office. He was crying like a child, and he asked witness to come outside. Plaintiff then said that the bother had been going on a long time, and he wanted it to be settled. Witness agreed, and said to plaintiff: "You give me £75, and we will sign receipts, here and now, between each other, which will settle this dispute for ever." Witness knew that plaintiff had no money, and he pointed out that he (plaintiff) could raise money on the insurance policy. Plaintiff was the very one to agree to it, and they went to Mr. Andrew, of the Standard Life Insurance Co., to arrange about a loan on the policy. At the interview with Mr. Andrew, witness happened to say something that did not suit Mr. Wood, and the latter got up in a towering rage, and said: "Keep the — policy." Witness was an architect and quantity surveyor.

Mr. Benjamin called the witness's attention to a letter of the 11th November, 1901, which he had sent to the plaintiff. In his evidence, witness had said that plaintiff had only paid £200.

Witness admitted that he wrote the letter (copy produced).

Mr. Benjamin (apologetically): It is a very long letter, my lord, and I am afraid the language is not very choice.

[Hopley, J.: I am accustomed to that sort of thing.]

Mr. Benjamin read the letter in question, in which defendant used very strong terms with regard to the conduct of the plaintiff, accusing him of pouring out "his devilish venom and spite" upon him (defendant). Defendant in this letter said that plaintiff had paid him £300.

Witness (in reply to further questions) said he admitted that the plaintiff must have paid him £300.

[Hopley, J.: The funny part of that letter is that it is signed: "Your affectionate brother, Ted."]

Witness (further cross-examined) said he knew at the time that he had no legal claim upon the plaintiff.

Mr. Benjamin: You have got no legal claim upon him now.

Witness: No.

Then why do you contest this action? —It is not we that brought it in. I have done everything I possibly could to prevent it coming here.

Why didn't you hand over the cession to Mr. Wood?—Why should I?

Why should you not?—I can tell you.

[Hopley, J.: Why did not you hand him the policy? That is what counsel means by "settling the action."]

Witness: I wanted to get the matter settled, and that is the reason why I wanted the receipt. If I had handed back that policy, he would have gone about boasting for the rest of his life that he had beaten the —.

In further cross-examination, witness said that he did not press the matter of the policy for some time, because they had been fighting for the last twenty years, and he had made up his mind that he would not re-open the question. In 1899 witness was in some difficulties. A meeting of his creditors was held. One of his creditors was Mr. Wood. He brought up a schedule which showed liabilities at £596 and assets at £1,145, making a balance in hand of £549. He paid his creditors 20s. in the £, with good interest.

Mr. Benjamin: Is this statement of affairs correct?

Witness: Yes.

Then why have you not brought up the policy of insurance as an asset?—I did not bring it up, because it was in dispute.

Charles Henry Littlewood (son-in-law of the defendant) also gave evidence.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the facts.

[Hopley, J.: The matter at issue between the parties to this suit—and it is regrettable that court of law should have to settle a dispute between two men who have arrived at their time of life, and who are closely connected by marriage—is, in short, whether the plaintiff is entitled to have returned to him a certain cession of a policy of insurance made by him in the year 1884 to the defendant, or whether, as a matter of fact, according to the pleadings, the defendant is entitled to regain that policy and to retain the cession against payment, which he alleges is due to him, of £390, together with interest. After briefly sketching the incidents connected with the liabilities which the defendant contracted on behalf of the plaintiff to Wood Bros., of Hull, and the subsequent correspondence which took place between the parties as to the repayment by plaintiff of his debt to the defendant. His Lordship proceeded to say: I pass over that stage, because it seems to me to be rendered unimportant by the fact that eventually, in the year 1888, a settlement which we sitting in this Court must consider to have been given for consideration as between themselves, was arrived at, which fixes the hitherto disputed accounts as between the parties. It may be that Sherwood knew that he was losing a bit of money; it may be that Wood knew that he was gaining a bit; but he himself was not in such a position, although he was doing better here than he had done in England, as to be able to be too generous with over-payments, and, as he was disputing the account, and apparently annoying Sherwood, the letter of July was eventually written by Sherwood himself. On the 4th July, Mr. Sherwood writes from London to his brother-in-law and sets forth practically or pretty much the same terms as were afterwards made by the solicitors on behalf of the defendant. These terms are £100 at once, a bill for £100 in six months, and another bill for £100 in a further six months, and a further bill for £100 in twelve months. Now comes a very significant sentence to my mind: "Of course, I shall give receipt in full discharge, when the policy is redeemed." In view of that statement, I might revert to the fact that in 1882 or early in 1883, in the correspondence which was taking place Wood had offered to Sherwood to insure his life for £500 for the benefit of Mr. Sherwood. That had been done, and this policy had been taken out on the 30th August, 1883, in the company here for £400. At that time the exact amount was a matter of dispute between the parties. Wood swears that all along he knew that it was not more than £400, and that he insured his life for £400, and that he sent on his policy of £400 in security for that amount. The fact that the amount of the policy was £400 bears out pretty strongly Wood's evidence. But to come back to the correspondence, we have the letter of Messrs. Sutcliffe, the defendant's solicitors, sent two days later to the defendant, viz., the 6th July, 1888. In that letter, Messrs. Sutcliffe say that, acting on behalf of Mr. Sherwood, they would accept the terms offered by the defendant. These are the terms that were accepted, and these are the terms that it is impossible to go behind. It is impossible to follow Mr. Sherwood when he says that there is a much larger sum owing to him than that indicated by this statement. In pursuance of that agreement that he should pay £100 then, and then £50, and another £50 within 12 months, there is no doubt that he sent £100, that another £50 was sent, and a further £50. This Mrs. Sherwood admits. What is in dispute is whether he carried out the further agreement to pay what was due at that time (another £100), and he (plaintiff) says that it is material whether the defendant paid it within 12 months or not. I see nothing in that agreement which changes the nature of the cession. For instance, Sutcliffes do not say whether that this agreement is contingent upon the plaintiff carrying out every letter of it, and that time is of the essence of the contract, and that if he did not redeem this policy within 12 months it becomes irrevocably that of their client. There was no objection taken at that time that the payments were out of time, or that anything would result from their being somewhat late. Now, the only other question is: Did the plaintiff carry out the further agreement and pay this £100? On this there is a direct conflict of evidence. Mr. Wood says that he did pay, and he says that he paid one part of it, at all events, in a somewhat peculiar fashion. He says that a £50 note came into his hands in the course of business, and that he sent it off by registered letter, and that he received a letter of acknowledgment from Mr. Sherwood, which was filed, together with the registered letter receipt, at the place where he carried on his mill in Plein-street, and that it was, in the removal which took place in 1891, lost with some other papers. He says that, as to the other £60, he can produce a receipt, and that he has shown that he paid the £60 when defendant came here. He says that with that payment he completed the payments which released his policy, and should have released his cession. If he made these payments, it seems to me that this cleared off the obligations between the parties. This cession, being only a security for money borrowed, if he discharged all that was due by him, this cession must, in due course, have been returned. Legally, he was entitled to claim it. The whole case, therefore, narrows itself down to this one matter—has the plaintiff discharged the obligation that is upon him; has he successfully shouldered the onus that is upon him of proving his case? I quite agree with Mr. McGregor that "nebulous hypotheses" will not do, and that we must have proof. Of course, there is in the first place, as far as legal proof is concerned, Mr. Wood's own oath, on which I should be, by itself, entitled to act if I thought he was entirely trustworthy. But I am asked to doubt that for the reason that he can produce no proof, and that the transactions are extraordinary. The question is: Is there any corroboration of these transactions? I think that as regards the payment of the sum of £60, Mr. Wood must be taken on the documents to be right, and that this payment of £60 was payment wholly and entirely independent of the promissory note in favour of Mrs. Sherwood. In testing the worth of the evidence, I have the fact that at some period or other this policy of insurance was handed back by Mr. Sherwood to Mr. Wood, and I have not had a word of explanation which can commend itself to my mind as to the reason why it was handed back, unless it be the reason given by Mr. Wood. Mr. Sherwood does not offer any explanation. Again, taking the plea, I do not see why the plaintiff should undertake to pay the defendant the sum of £390. It seems to me that that paragraph of the plea is in direct conflict with the proved facts in this case. In October, 1891, we have letters containing abuse between the parties, which gentlemen of their position and age should not have indulged in. In October, 1891, defendant said: "We acknowledge we accepted what was equivalent to 10s. in the £, so that you would not go bankrupt, and we should get nothing, and now you boast of having settled with us, but your moral obligation is still the same. You have paid a few pounds over £300, which is not half of the £634 we paid for you." One cannot help feeling that this is a corroboration of the evidence of the plaintiff that he paid £300. In 1897 the plaintiff went to England, and we have the letter sent to Mr. Sutcliffe by the defendant, as follows: "In reply to your letter, I beg to say that Mr. John Henry Wood, formerly of Alford, Lincolnshire, who now resides in Cape Town, complied with the conditions agreed upon as stated in yours dated the 6th July, 1888, and that in accordance with such agreement, I have no further claim upon the said J. H. Wood." We can only take that letter to mean what it says. Whether we look at it from the legal point of view, or from Mr. Sherwood's own point, we can only take it to mean that the £100 for the policy had been paid, and that defendant had no further claim upon him for the policy or the cession or anything else. I am extremely sorry that two men, both apparently respectable men should have reached that stage when neither could see the points in the other's case, and I am sorry that they had to come to this Court, and that I have had to decide the matter between them. The only one point that I can congratulate them upon is that they have kept their wives and children out of the witness-box to support them. I find on the documents, and chiefly on the documents, that this account has been paid in full; and, to use Mr. Sherwood's own words, "all the conditions in the letter of his attorneys of 1888 have been complied with by Mr. Wood." On his own words, I must give judgment against him, and if he has any satisfaction hereafter in explaining to his friends that his words do not mean what apparently they mean to anybody else, he may have that satisfaction. I must decide as an ordinary common-sense person, and a lawyer, in such circumstances, would decide, and say that the balance of evidence is against him, and that the plaintiff has made out his case. As to damages, there are no damages proved by the plaintiff. The order of the Court is that the cession should be returned to the plaintiff, and that the defendant should pay the costs of suit.

Sale — Specific performance — Damages—Shares.

The defendants agreed to take on the plaintiff company for the purpose of amalgamating it with other companies of a similar character. Part of the purchase price was to be paid in cash, and the remainder in shares in the new company. The cash was paid, but the shares were kept over pending transfer. In an action for specific performance and the delivery of the shares, the defendant company alleged misrepresentation on the part of the vendors, but at the trial failed to establish this defence. Judgment was given for the delivery of the shares, or in the alternative for the payment of damages equal to their full value. A further sum was also awarded as damages suffered by the delay in making delivery: the shares being now unsaleable. On appeal, the latter sum awarded as damages was disallowed as no specific loss had been proved.

Semle (per Buchanan, A.C.J.): Where specific performance of a contract of sale is decreed, damages immediately arising out of and consequent on the mora of the vendors may be recovered.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia.

The action in the Court below was brought by Emil Albert von Hirschberg, in his capacity as liquidator of the Beira Cold Storage, Limited, against the Rhodesia Cold Storage and Trading Company, Limited. Plaintiff sued on a written agreement entered into on February 10, 1903, between one Davis, as the duly authorised agent of the Beira Cold Storage, Limited, and one Bartman, as trustee for a company about to be formed, which agreement was subsequently adopted by the defendant company, who took over the rights and liabilities of Bartman on March 20 of the same year. The agreement was for the sale of the whole of the business and assets as a going concern.

[The record in this case having been very voluminous, we can only report those portions thereof which are more particularly essential to the issue. Counsel in the appeal case having quoted the pages in the record; the passages referred to are given from the record, and the page of the record is inserted in the margin.]

The declaration was in the following terms:—

P. 4. 1. The plaintiff is liquidator of the Beira Cold Storage, Limited, and sues in such capacity, and is the proper person to sue; the defendants are the Rhodesian Cold Storage and Trading Company, Limited, a company duly registered in England, and carrying on business in this territory.

2. The Beira Cold Storage, Limited, is a Company registered in Southern Rhodesia and carried on business in that territory and elsewhere and prior to the agreements and acts hereinafter set out the Company held certain assets consisting of leaseholds, plant, credits and other assets in this territory in addition to landed property and assets situated at Beira and elsewhere.

3. On the tenth day of February, 1903, an agreement was entered into between the Beira Cold Storage, Limited, called the Vendor Company, and one Sidney William Bartman on behalf of a company about to be formed the terms of which are more fully set out in the annexure hereto marked "A," which forms part of this declaration.

4. Subsequently the defendant company was duly incorporated, and on the 20th day of March, 1903, adopted and held themselves bound as the purchaser company by the terms of the said agreement. This will more fully appear from the document hereunto annexed and marked "B," which also forms part of this declaration.

5. In order to carry out the terms of the said agreement on the 13th May, 1903, it was decided by the shareholders thereof to wind up the Beira Cold Storage, Limited, voluntarily, and the plaintiff, Emil Albert von Hirschberg was duly appointed liquidator of the company on the same date.

6. The defendants have paid to the plaintiff the cash consideration of £11,383 mentioned in clause 4 of the said agreement A.

7. The certificate for 22,768 shares, p. 5. part consideration of the said agreements, was handed to the Bank of Africa in London, in trust for both companies until transfer of the Vendor Company's property and assets to the purchasing company.

8. On or about the 18th day of April, 1903, the defendants took physical possession of all the premises and plant of the Vendor Company, and took control of and began carrying on the business hitherto carried on by the Vendor Company. Transfer of the Vendor Company's assets to the defendants has not yet been completed.

9. Though as above set out the defendants are in full control of the business of the Vendor Company, the defendants wrongfully and unlawfully refuse to deliver or allow the said bank to deliver the said shares to the plaintiff.

10. By reason of such wrongful non-delivery the Vendor Company has suffered loss and damage to an amount of £11,384.

11. The costs incidental to the winding up of the Vendor Company have been as follows:—The sum of £20 10s. 4d., being the amount paid to Messrs. Budd, Johnson and Jecks, of London, Solicitors; the sum of £18 2s. 1d., paid by the Vendor Company to their solicitors at Salisbury; the sum of £10 15s. 8d., being the further costs of liquidation prior to these proceedings and payable to the Vendor Company's solicitor at Salisbury; and a further sum of £400 for general expenses incident to such winding up, or in all the sum of £450 8s. 1d. In terms of clause 3 of the said agreement annexed and marked A the defendants have agreed and are bound to pay the said sum to the plaintiff's, but the defendants refuse to pay the same.

12. All things have happened, all times elapsed, and all conditions been fulfilled entitling the plaintiff to sue.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims:—

1. Delivery of 11,384 seven per centum fully paid-up preferent shares of £1 each, and 11,384 fully paid-up ordinary shares of £1 each in the defendant company in terms of the said agreement or payment of £22,768 their value

2. £11,384 as and for damages sustained.

3. The sum of £450 8s. 1d. as detailed in paragraph 11 of the declaration, with interest a tempore mora.

4. With costs of suit.

5. And such alternative relief as may seem meet in the premises.

An agreement made the tenth day of February, one thousand nine hundred and three between The Beira Cold Storage, Limited, a company incorporated in Southern Rhodesia with limited liability under the British South Africa Company's Ordinance No. 2 of 1895 (hereinafter called "The Vendor Company") of the one part and Sidney William Bartman of Finsbury Pavement House, Moorgate Street, in the City of London, on behalf of the company below mentioned (hereinafter referred to as the purchasing company) of the other part. Whereas the Vendor Company has for some time past carried on business in Rhodesia and Portuguese East Africa. And whereas it is intended as soon as may be after the completion of the sale hereby agreed to be made that the Vendor Company shall pass an effective resolution for the voluntary winding up thereof. And whereas the Purchasing Company to be called The Rhodesian Cold Storage and Trading Company, Limited, or some other similar name is about to be formed under the English Companies Acts with a nominal capital of five hundred thousand pounds divided into two hundred and fifty thousand seven per centum cumulative preference shares and two hundred and fifty thousand ordinary shares, the preference shares ranking both as to capital and dividend in priority to the ordinary shares, and having for its object among other things the acquisition and working of the undertaking of the Vendor Company and of the said business so hitherto carried on as aforesaid, and other similar businesses. And whereas by the Articles of Association of the Purchasing Company it is provided that such Company shall immediately after the incorporation thereof adopt (inter alia) the agreement therein referred to being these presents: Now it is hereby agreed as follows:—

1. The Vendor Company shall sell and transfer and the Purchasing Company, when incorporated, shall purchase and take over the undertaking business and goodwill of the Vendor Company, and all the lands, buildings, hereditaments, goods, chattels, moneys, credits, debts, bills, notes, trade marks, if any, and things in action of the Vendor Company, and the full benefit of all contracts, agreements and securities, to which the Vendor Company is entitled, and all other assets whatsoever and wheresoever of the Vendor Company other than and not including its uncalled capital together with the right to use any words to represent the carrying on of the business in succession to the Vendor Company.

2. As a part of the consideration for the said sale and transfer the Purchasing Company shall undertake, pay, satisfy and discharge all the debts, liabilities and obligations of the Vendor Company whatsoever, and shall adopt, fulfil and perform all contracts and engagements binding on it either now or which shall become binding on it before the completion of the sale and shall indemnify the Vendor Company, its liquidators and contributories against such debts, liabilities, obligations, contracts and engagements and against all actions, proceedings, costs, damages, claims and demands in respect thereof.

3. As a further part of the consideration for the said sale and transfer the Purchasing Company shall pay and at all times hereafter keep the Vendor Company, its liquidators and contributories indemnified against all the costs, charges and expenses of and incidental to the winding up and dissolution of the Vendor Company, and of carrying the said transfer into effect.

4. The residue of the consideration p. 7. for the said sale and transfer shall be the sum of thirty-four thousand one hundred and fifty-one pounds, which shall be paid and satisfied as follows:—As to the sum of eleven thousand three hundred and eighty-three pounds by the payment thereof to the Vendor Company in cash, and as to the further sum of twenty-two thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight pounds by the allotment to the Vendor Company or its nominees or the nominees of Robert George Davis of 113, Cannon-street, in the City of London, manager in London of the Bank of Africa, Ltd., of eleven thousand three hundred and eighty-four seven per cent. fully paid-up preference shares of £1 each, No. 250,001 to 261,384, both inclusive, and subject to no restriction as to transferability in the capital of the Purchasing Company and eleven thousand three hundred and eighty-four fully paid-up ordinary shares of £1 each. No. 8 to 11,391, both inclusive and subject to no restriction as to transferability in the capital of the same company.

5. The Purchasing Company shall, without investigation, objection or requisition, accept the title of the Vendor Company to the premises hereby agreed to be sold.

6. The sale and purchase hereby agreed to be made shall be completed on the twentieth of March, one thousand nine hundred and three, at the registered office of the Purchasing Company when the said residue of consideration in cash and shares shall be paid and satisfied subject to the provisions of this agreement, and the Purchasing Company shall issue certificates for the said fully paid shares in accordance with this agreement, and the Vendor Company shall at the expense of the Purchasing Company execute and do all such assurances and things as shall reasonably be required by the Purchasing Company for vesting in it the said premises and possession thereof, and giving to it the full benefit of this agreement.

7. No shares in the capital of the Purchasing Company shall be allotted before the allotment to the Vendor Company or its nominees or the nominees of the said Robert George Davis of all the fully paid up shares hereinbefore mentioned, and no certificates of such fully paid up shares shall include more than one hundred shares. No special settlement on any Stock Exchange for any shares of the Purchasing Company shall be applied for until such shares shall be fully paid up.

8. The possession of the said premises shall be retained by the vendor Company up to the completion, and in the meantime they shall carry on the said business of the Vendor Company in the same manner as heretofore so as to maintain the same as a going concern, and they shall as from the first January, One thousand nine hundred and three, be deemed to have been and to be carrying on such business on behalf of the purchasing company. And shall account and be entitled to be indemnified accordingly, and the purchasing company shall, subject to the consent of the insurance offices and until completion of the purchase, be entitled to the benefit of the current insurances of the premises.

p. 8. 9. Unless before the thirty-first day of March, One thousand nine hundred and three, the purchasing company shall have become entitled to commence business and this agreement shall have been adopted by the purchasing company in such manner as to render the same binding on the same company, the vendor company may by notice in writing to the said Sidney William Bartman determine the same.

10. If from any cause whatever other than the wilful default of the vendor company the purchase shall not be completed on the said twentieth March, One thousand nine hundred and three, the purchasing company shall pay interest as from such date at the rate of five per cent. per annum on the sum of thirty-four thousand one hundred and fifty-one pounds until the purchase shall be completed.

As witness the execution of the Beira Cold Storage, Limited, by the hand of the said Robert George Davis, their duly authorised attorney, set hereto, and the hand of the said Sidney William Bartman set hereto the day and year first above written.

S. W. BARTMAN.

p. 9. An agreement made the 20th day of March, 1903, between the Rhodesia Cold Storage and Trading Company, Limited of Finsbury Pavement House, in the city of London (hereinafter called "the company"), of the first part, the Beira Cold Storage, Limited, of Beira, Portuguese East Africa (hereinafter called "the vendors"), of the second part, and Sidney William Bartman, of Finsbury Pavement House aforesaid, of the third part. Whereas by an agreement (hereinafter called "the principal contract"), dated the 10th day of February, 1903, and made between the vendors of the one part and the said Sidney William Bartman as trustees for the company (which was then intended to be and has since been formed under the Companies' Acts 1862 to 1900), of the other part, it was agreed that the vendors should sell and the company should purchase the undertaking and property therein referred to upon the terms and subject to the stipulations therein expressed.

Now these presents witness and declare as follows:

The principal contract is hereby adopted by the company and shall be binding on the vendors and the company in the same manner and take effect as if the company has been in existence at the date thereof, and has been a party thereto, instead of the said Sidney William Bartman, who from henceforth shall be discharged from all liability under or in respect thereof.

As witness the common seals of the companies' parties hereto and the hand and seal of the said Sidney William Bartman.

The common seal of the Rhodesia Cold Storage and Trading Company, Limited, was hereunto affixed in the presence of:

P. LYTTELTON GELL,
W. J. ELDER,

Directors.

S. W. BARTMAN, Secretary.

Signed, sealed, and delivered by the said Sidney William Bartman in the presence of:

S. W. BARTMAN.

To this declaration the defendants pleaded:

1. The defendants admit the allegation in paragraphs 1 to 8 inclusive of the declaration and deny those in paragraphs 10, 11, and 12 thereof. p. 10.

2. As to paragraph 9 thereof the defendants say that prior to the issue of the summons in this action they had delivered the said shares in London to one Davis, who was the agent of the said Beira Cold Storage, Limited, to receive the same. Subsequently, after the issue of the said summons, they obtained an order in the High Court of Justice restraining the said company or their agents from parting with the said shares; copy of the said order is annexed hereto and marked A.

Save as aforesaid, the defendants deny the allegations in the said ninth paragraph of the declaration.

3. The defendants say further that when they entered into the said agreements of the 10th February, 1903, and 20th March, 1903, for the purchase of the business of the said company they did so relying on the accuracy of the balance-sheet of the said company made up to the 31st March, 1902, which was handed to them prior to the 10th February, 1903, by the said company as being a true statement of the financial position of the said company, and in order to induce the defendants to purchase the said business, and the defendants were so induced.

4. Subsequent to the dates of the said agreements and the events referred to in paragraphs 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the declaration the defendants discovered that the said balance-sheet was false and misleading, and the financial position of the said company was not as represented by them, and that the books and accounts of the said company were false and contained serious discrepancies.

p. 14. 5. The defendants have furnished the plaintiff with an extract from the report of the auditors whom the defendants employed to examine the said books and accounts of the said company after the defendant discovered that the said balance-sheet was false, giving particulars of such errors and discrepancies. A copy of the said extract is annexed hereto, marked B, and to which defendants crave leave to refer.

6. As soon as the defendants became aware of the said misrepresentations they commenced an action in London in the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division, for rescission of the said agreements by reason of the said misrepresentation, which action is still pending. A copy of the summons in the said action is annexed hereto, marked C.

Wherefore the defendants pray that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff made application as follows:

p. 17. 1. He admits the allegation in paragraph 2 that the said injunction was obtained, he says he was no party to the proceedings, nor has he any knowledge of the circumstances under which the said order was obtained. After service upon him the plaintiff availed himself of the liberty given him in the said injunction, and he has moved the High Court of Justice in England to set the order aside; his application is still pending in that Court.

2. As to paragraphs 3, 4, and 5, he denies that any statement of account or balance-sheet was handed to the defendants by himself or the Beira Cold Storage Company. No statement of account, financial statement, or balance-sheet was ever referred to during the negotiations or formed any inducement to the defendants to enter into the said contract. Should this Court hold to the contrary, the plaintiff says the said balance-sheet was the ordinary annual business statement drawn up on the date mentioned, and that the same is true and correct balance-sheet.

3. The plaintiff admits the receipt of the report referred to, but denies that it is correct in any particular.

4. As to paragraph 6, the plaintiff says the action herein set out was only commenced after summons had been served in this action. On the 15th day of March, 1904, the defendants made application to this Court to set aside this action on the ground of the pendency of proceedings in the High Court of Justice aforesaid. The application was dismissed with costs against defendants.

5. Save as above, the plaintiff denies p. 18. all and singular the allegations of fact in the plea contained.

The rejoinder was general.

CONSENT TO AMENDMENT OF DECLARATION.

We, the undersigned, attorneys for p. 21. the plaintiffs and defendants respectively in this cause, consent to the amendment of the plaintiffs' declaration as follows, that is to say:

Paragraph 10 to read: "By reason of such wrongful non-delivery the vendor company has suffered loss and damage to an amount of £11,384," the amendment consisting of the substitution of the figures £11,384 instead of the figures £1,133 18s.

In the prayer at the end, amend Claim No. 2 by substituting the figures £11,384 instead of the figures £1,133 18s., so as to read "£11,384 as and for damages sustained."

And we further consent to the same amendment being made in the summons, so as to read (in paragraph 2): "2. The sum of £11,384 as and for damages sustained."

Sir,—We beg to give you notice of the following further particulars under paragraphs 4 and 5 of defendants' pleas, viz.: p. 22.

1. That under the item of £4,627 3s. to sundry creditors in the balance-sheet is included a sum of £3,000, which was a loan from the Bank of Africa, Limited, Beira, to the Beira Cold Storage, Limited, and should not have been included among the sundry creditors of the company, but should have appeared in the balance-sheet as a separate item.

2. That the value placed on the assets in the balance-sheet misrepresents the true value of such assets, no sufficient depreciation having been written off.

3. That at the time of the sale of the said business by the Beira Cold Storage, Limited, to defendants the business was not in the flourishing condition represented by the balance-sheet, but was in a moribund condition, and being carried on at a great loss.—We have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servants,

GRIMMER, DU PREEZ AND TOWNSEND,
Attorneys for Defendants.

p. 28. MR. WALLACE'S EVIDENCE.

A.—I may say that I asked Mr. Lawley for information as to the capitalisation and general position of the Beira Cold Storage Company, and turning to the Secretary, he said: "Where is that balance-sheet that arrived by the last mail, or 'the mail before last'?" And on it being produced, he handed it to me, he said, "There you have all the information, and know as much about it as I do," or words to that effect.

Q.—Was that balance-sheet and the report, and the information it contained, considered by those acting on behalf of the defendant company before they arrived at the agreement?

Mr. Wallace: I object to that. We have not heard that anybody else was acting on behalf of the defendant company.

A.—Yes.

Mr. Vaughan Williams: Who else was acting on behalf of the defendant company at that time in considering the acquisition of these businesses?

A.—There were the proposed directors and their solicitor.

Q.—Who were the proposed directors?

A.—Mr. P. Lyttelton Gell, Sir F. W. Forester Walker, and Mr. Elder. I have forgotten his initials. Mr. Hawksley was the solicitor, and Messrs. Jackson and Pixley were the auditors.

p. 39. MR. V. WILLIAMS.

Q.—Having formed the plan of getting in other companies, to whom did you go?

A.—I naturally went to Mr. Lawley, who I knew as a director of the Beira Cold Storage.

Q.—And you put the scheme to him, did you?

A.—I did not put the scheme to him at the moment. I went to ask him the position of his Beira Cold Storage Company. I did not know whether their capital was £5,000 or £500,000. I knew nothing about it.

p. 40. Q.—You cannot say when you called on Mr. Lawley?

A.—I should say October, 1902. I know we were shooting about that time.

p. 53. MR. WALLACE.

Mr. Vaughan Williams: Were all the negotiations with regard to this transaction conducted in this country?

A.—All of them, so far as the defendant company was concerned.

Q.—You told my learned friend, if I remember rightly, that you did not hear that the directors of the plaintiff company intended to sell or unload or whatever expression one may use, their shares in the defendant company as soon as they could. p. 54

A.—I only heard that a year afterwards.

Mr. Wallace: Is it entirely wrong to suggest that Mr. Lawley was communicating with the Beira Company on your account?

A.—No, I should not think it is wrong to suggest so at all. I told you I approached Mr. Lawley in the first instance, and finding the position of the Beira Company, I made him that offer, and he sent it along. I should not think it would be wrong.

Q.—I mean that Mr. Lawley was acting rather as your agent in communicating with the Beira Company.

A.—I should say not. He acted in his capacity as director of the Beira Cold Storage Company.

Q.—As an agent only?

A.—I went to him as a director of the Beira Cold Storage Company, and as such I wrote to him.

F. GELL'S EVIDENCE. p. 52

Q.—During the negotiations did you make yourself familiar and acquainted with the figures and position, as far as you could, of the plaintiff company which it was proposed to buy?

A.—So far as it was disclosed in the papers which were laid before me.

Q.—Were the profit and loss account and balance-sheet of the plaintiff company shown to you?

A.—Yes, that was the fundamental evidence.

Q.—Did you go through them?

A.—I did.

Q.—Were they gone through by Messrs. Jackson and Pixley?

A.—By instructions, and as they signed it I suppose they did go through it. I went through it with Mr. Hawksley. p. 61

Q.—Ultimately we know that the agreement of the 10th of February, confirmed on the 20th of March, was entered into.

A.—Yes, we decided to adopt that agreement.

Q.—What influenced you in adopting that agreement?

A.—The statement of the value of the assets which was laid before me, and the value of the trade which I thought the company would be acquiring.

Q.—What impression as to the financial position of the plaintiff company did you form from those documents?

A.—I should say that looking upon the statement which they made that they were promising well, but that they were fettered by shortage of capital, and that they wanted fresh capital to put them into a better and stronger position.

Q.—In arriving at your willingness to pay the price which you agreed to pay, were you influenced by the apparent profit disclosed?

Mr. Wallace: That is a very leading question.

A.—Absolutely; practically I will say nothing else. For the value of the trade we are acquiring I went on their statements in the profit and loss account.

Mr. Vaughan Williams: It was suggested yesterday, if I rightly understood, that you were influenced by a desire to acquire a monopoly of the cold storage business. What do you say as to that?

A.—It was not in the power of the Beira Cold Storage Company to give us a monopoly. This came before me originally as a proposal to buy the Mashonaland Railway plant and the Rail—a monopoly. This came before me the Chartered Company. That plant at the same time was being leased to the Beira Cold Storage Company; the Mashonaland Railway Company had erected that plant with the idea of reducing the cost of living in Rhodesia. It was a particular pet scheme of Mr. Rhodes. We were not at all unwilling to sell that plant to the new company, with which I then had no kind of connection, and knew nothing whatever of.

Q.—I think there was a difficulty as to selling it, and ultimately it was leased.

A.—It was already leased to the Beira Cold Storage Company, but on a short term, I think at six months' notice, therefore the Beira Company could only sell a six months' tenancy. I may not be right as to the number of months.

GELL'S EVIDENCE.

p. 63.

Q.—Until about ten days before the agreement this company was not your company, and did not interest you at all?

A.—Yes, that was so.

Q.—Except, of course, as a Chartered director?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Then, of course, when they asked you to be a director, and you were going to put your name on the prospectus, you wanted to see what you were doing?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Was it then that you got the report and balance-sheet which you have been alluding to?

A.—A little later, within those few days.

Q.—Do you describe yourself as a good accountant?

A.—No.

Q.—In examining the balance-sheet and the rest of the documents, how long did you have it before you?

A.—Several times that I can recollect. It came up once or twice at the Board when we were preparing the prospectus, when Mr. Hawksley was attending. We were checking various statements, and so on. Then I remember one Saturday afternoon I had this and other papers before me with Mr. Bartman at my home, and I worked on the whole lot. I spent a long time initialling them all, and this one amongst others. (F. J. 5 handed to witness.)

Q.—Did you go through the figures p. 64. yourself?

A.—I did.

Q.—Personally?

A.—Personally. I checked them all off against the statements we made in the prospectus, for one thing.

Q.—What else did you do with them?

A.—They are not my figures. I could do nothing more with them than study them, and assume, as I did, that they were correct. I therefore found that two people whose names were known to me, Mr. Van Praagh and Mr. Martini, and an auditor whose name was well known to me, certified that the land and buildings were worth so much, and the plant was so much, and so on. What I attached a great deal of importance to was the trade we were buying.

Q.—What I may call the turnover?

A.—Yes. There were £8,000 brought in from revenue account. I forget what set-off there might be against that, but, apart from that, £8,000 return was a satisfactory return on a capital of £22,000, and I remember I also noted that they had not distributed their profits, but had carried them forward into capital, which created the impression in my mind that they were doing a growing business, but were short of capital.

Q.—I presume they had not distributed a dividend?

A.—They showed a very large and substantial profit. They did not distribute it, but carried into capital, which would make the impression that they were careful people with a growing business, and they were building it up out of dividends. It seemed to me to account for their desire to get the fresh capital that the amalgamation offered them.

Q.—Have you seen the telegrams that had passed between Mr. Lawley and the company?

A.—No.

VON HIRSCHBERG'S EVIDENCE. p. 212.

£450 represents the costs of liquidation at present, as far as I can ascertain. While I was secretary, only two occasions when shares of Beira Company were transferred for cash.

Cross-examined: The balance-sheet was drawn up for shareholders. It was printed before it was adopted by directors, and was sent out to shareholders. That would be all the information sent to shareholders who did not attend the meeting.

At the time it was published—unknown to ourselves—it was not correct —it would be quite sufficient if statement was made by chairman of meeting. At meeting all shareholders present were aware of the mistakes, and therefore no statement was made. The next balance-sheet would have had to correct the items of Pauling and Co. and the rent for railway storages. The shareholders not present at the meeting would not know of this.

p. 214. I certainly expected a small profit. Evans's balance-sheet shows a loss on year's trading, but I have no knowledge how his figures are arrived at. We started a butchery business, it was not exactly a failure, but not a success. Mineral water arrangement was with the view of making the business more successful. To save salaries the directors managed sections of the business themselves. Up to the end of 1900 we wrote off no depreciation. I have no knowledge of machinery. In 1901 the depreciation of £2,000—this was arrived at an estimated deficiency. As to values I would back the opinion of my directors, who have worked with the stuff for years, against that of Mr. Coxwell, who has only lately examined the assets.

Our balance-sheet of 1902:—I think I had drawn it up by April 15th. It was eventually ready about the end of April. It had by that time been handed back by the auditor. It was printed almost immediately. It would be ready towards the end of May. It was adopted by directors towards the end of June.

The judgment in the Court below was as follows:

p. 300. Watermeyer, J.: The plaintiff in this case is the liquidator of the Beira Cold Storage, Ltd., a company that was registered in Southern Rhodesia, and from 1899 to 1903 carried on business in Portuguese East Africa and Southern Rhodesia.

He sues on a written agreement entered into on February 10th, 1903, between one Davis as the duly authorised agent of the Beira Cold Storage, Ltd., and one Bartman, as trustee for a company about to be formed, which agreement was subsequently adopted by the defendant company, who took over the rights and liabilities of Bartman on March 20th of the same year.

The agreement which is attached to the declaration is for the sale of the whole of the business and assets of the Beira Company as a going concern for a consideration which for the present may be summed up under four heads:

1. Payment by the new company of the debts and liabilities of the Beira Company.

2. Payment of a definite sum of money.

3. Delivery of a certain number of shares in the new company.

4. Payment of the costs of liquidation of the Beira Company.

The declaration alleges that in pursuance of this agreement the new company have taken physical possession of all the property and business of the Beira Company. (I presume they have also made themselves responsible for the debts and liabilities, though nothing is said about that in the pleadings.)

By some mistake not explained at the trial the declaration as originally drafted alleged that legal transfer had been effected, and this was admitted in plea. As it appeared clear from the evidence that this was not so, I allowed the declaration to be amended to be in accordance with facts. When the application for amendment was made Mr. Russell, for defendants, sought to make a condition, i.e., that certain additional particulars tendered by him should be admitted. I do not think he was entitled to make that condition. I think the two matters were quite distinct. I think the plaintiff was entitled to the amendment without condition. I decided also to admit defendants further particulars for reasons which I hope to explain at the proper stage, but I want to be understood that I treated the matters quite independently, as not hinging on one another at all.

The declaration goes on to aver that the monetary consideration has been paid, but claims (1) delivery of the share consideration, (2) £11,384 as damages for delay in such delivery, and (3) £450 8s. for costs of liquidation.

The first defence raised is that this matter is the subject of judicial proceedings pending in England. In proof of that copies of a writ of summons and an injunction taken out in the High Court of Justice against plaintiff and Davis, the agent who signed the agreement, are attached to the plea. The dates of these documents are instructive. The summons in this court was taken out on the 3rd March, 1904, and served on the manager of the defendant company on the 4th March. The English writ of summons was taken out on March 4th and the injunction on April 29th. p. 301

The inference is obvious that it was on cabled information of the service of the writ in Salisbury, Rhodesia, that the directors of the defendant company took out their writ in London. Further, defendants have tendered no evidence that they are proceeding with this action in London, beyond an application made to me on March 15th, 1904, for a stay of proceedings in this Court, which application I felt bound to refuse. The only evidence now before the Court as to further proceedings in this matter in London are the statement by Mr. Davis at the Commission that the action had been dismissed as against him, and the statement of Von Hirschberg that the injunction had been dismissed, and he knew of no further proceedings under the writ of summons.

If this defence was seriously relied on defendant should have offered some more information as to their proceedings since March 15th, 1904. But even presuming they are proceeding in London, I cannot see how that prevents me from dealing with the matter here. The matter is within the jurisdiction of this Court as laid down by the Order in Council, and I cannot refuse to hear a plaintiff and deal with his case simply because subsequent to the commencement of proceedings in this Court the defendants choose to commence, with regard to the same matter, proceedings in another Court, which, as far as I know, sitting here, may or may not have jurisdiction.

The defence of proceedings in another Court may be dismissed at once.

The real defence in the case is contained in paragraphs 3 and 4 and annexure "B" of the plea.

As the defendants admit the agreement it is incumbent on them to show why they refuse to carry it out.

Their reasons are set forth in the above-named paragraphs: They say that they entered into the agreement "Relying on the accuracy of the balance-sheet of the said company made up to the 31st March, 1902, which was handed to them prior to the 10th February, 1903, by the said company as being a true statement of the financial position of the said company and in order to induce defendants to purchase the said business, and defendants were so induced."

They go on to say that subsequently they discovered "That the said balance-sheet was false and misleading and the financial position of the said company was not as represented by them, and that the books and accounts of the said company were false and contained serious discrepancies."

And in annexure "B" they give particulars to support these allegations.

The essence of this defence then is that a false and misleading balance-sheet was produced to defendants by the company in order to induce them to buy, and that they were thereby induced to buy.

When I read this plea first I understood it as a direct allegation of fraud against the Beira Cold Storage Company, and certainly some of the documents produced in evidence would seem to show that defendants intended to set up a charge of fraud against the Beira Company. But Mr. Russell, for defendants, has argued that it is not necessary for his case to contend that there was actual fraud, but that it is sufficient to show that there was misrepresentation, however innocent, which misled defendants as to the true financial position of the company.

He does not, however, actually withdraw the imputation of fraud. He stated in argument that if knowledge of the falsity of the representations were necessary the evidence proved it, but that it was not necessary to prove knowledge—only that the representations were false in fact.

In answer to the plea the plaintiff in his replication says that "He denies that any statement of account or balance-sheet was handed to defendant by himself or the Beira Cold Storage Company, no statement of account, financial statement or balance-sheet was referred to during the negotiations or formed any inducement to the defendants to enter into the said contract."

In case it is ruled otherwise, he pleads that the balance-sheet in question was a true and correct balance-sheet.

At the Commission in London Major Johnson put in the document which it is alleged misled and deceived defendants, and which in the plea is called shortly the balance-sheet of March 31st, 1902.

The document consists of three parts:

1. Balance-sheet as at close of business on the 31st March, 1902.
2. Profit and loss account as at close of business on the 31st March, 1902.
3. Directors' annual report to 31st March, 1902.

As this document is made the basis of defendant's case I shall proceed to examine it.

Firstly, as to what it shows in itself, apart from subsequent evidence;

Secondly, the circumstances under which it came into existence and the particulars as to which it is said to be false and misleading;

Thirdly, the manner in which it came into the hands of the promoters of defendant company; p. 303.

Fourthly, how far these promoters were in fact misled by this document.

Firstly, taking the document by itself, not as an expert accountant, but as an ordinary man tempted to invest in the shares of the company:

I agree with Mr. Lyttelton Gell and Sir John Cragge that it shows on the face of it a very promising state of affairs. It shows a profit brought forward from the previous year's working of £1,157 9s. 6d., and an apparent profit for the current year's working of £2,456 8s. 3d. But against this latter figure the directors in their report recommend the writing off of £1,289 12s. 8d. for depreciation of plant, lands, and buildings.

This still leaves a profit for the year's working of £1,177 15s. 7d. Thus on the two years together they show a total profit of £2,335 5s. 1d. slightly over 10 per cent. on their subscribed capital. Yet they do not suggest any dividend, but carry forward this profit.

Mr. Lyttelton Gell and Sir John Craggs would seem to be quite justified in saying that this statement of accounts seemed to imply cautious directors, who were building up a sound business out of profits. I cannot, however, agree with the manner in which this apparent profit was treated by the promoters of the defendant company and their accountants for the purposes of their prospectus. The current year's profit, which I work out from the balance-sheet at £1,177 15s. 7d., in the hands of defendants' accountants becomes a certified annual profit for the purpose of their prospectus of £3,274.

The process by which this is accomplished does not commend itself to me.

Firstly, they ignore the depreciation which the directors in their report propose to write off. They justify this on the technical ground that the directors did not bring this depreciation into their balance-sheet, but placed it separately in their report. I am quite prepared to accept the evidence of the expert accountants who have appeared before me and at the Commission that it would be a more correct method of preparing the annual statement to bring this depreciation directly into the balance-sheet, instead of placing it in a separate report attached to the balance-sheet. But as one unlearned in accounting matters, it seems to me that it was sufficient that it was there—apparent on the face of the document—where all interested in the financial position of the company could see it. And I think the action of defendants' accountants is, to say the least of it, inconsistent, when they utilise this technical error, if it be one, to swell the apparent profits which they advertise to intending shareholders in the prospectus, whilst later on they make it their most serious complaint against the Beira Company that the directors had not made sufficient allowance for depreciation. I have not lost sight of the fact that by a few words in small print the accountants protect themselves from a literal misstatement on this point—I refer to the words in the certificate: "After charging depreciation (except in the case of the Beira Company)." But I think those words are so placed in the prospectus that if an intending investor, not being an accountant, saw them at all he would conclude that only some small depreciation, not worth noticing, would have to be written off the Beira profits, and he would be very much surprised to hear that the accountants and promoters of the new company knew that the responsible directors of the Beira Company had recommended the writing off of so large a sum as £1,280. But these promoters add two other serious items to the profit as appearing in the balance-sheet.

Firstly, an item of £500 appears on the balance-sheet as "provision for rent due on railway storages." This is subsequently made a complaint that the rent due at the time turned out to be £588. But when preparing the prospectus this £500 is eliminated from the balance-sheet so as to further swell the alleged profits. The accountant, Mr. Binnie, justifies this on the ground that it was intended to purchase the Railway Storages, and as therefore rent would no longer be payable, it should be eliminated from the expenses and thereby swell the profits, and as Major Johnson and Mr. Lyttelton Gell say that the certificate was carefully explained to them by Mr. Binnie or Mr. Pixley, and that they checked all the figures, I must presume that they adopt this reasoning. The only concession that Mr. Binnie would make on this point was that by an oversight which he could not understand, he had omitted to append a note that this increased profit would be due to the purchase of the railway premises.

Sir John Craggs, one of the other expert accountants, called, disagrees with that opinion, and says: "The profits must be certified according to the profits of that year, but it must be mentioned in the words of the certificate or elsewhere in the documents of that date that a change in the rent or other conditions had taken place."

I would suggest further that if the purchase of premises by doing away with rent to that extent causes increased profit, such increased profit should be apportioned to the premises purchased—in other words, that if £500 was going to be saved by purchasing the Railway Cold Storage, that would be profit on that purchase, and not on the purchase of the Beira Cold Storage, whereas it is carefully stated by the promoters that the profits alleged are exclusive of any estimate of profit from the railway plant.

But taking Mr. Binnie's reasoning in its most favourable light, it—by his own admission—absolutely falls to the ground when it appeared by the issued prospectus that the new company had abandoned all idea of purchasing the Railway Cold Storage.

When the draft prospectus (F.J. 4) was printed it was undoubtedly the intention of the promoters to purchase the Railway Cold Storage—that was February 4th—but when the final prospectus was issued on March 5th this intention had been abandoned, and it had been decided to lease the Railway Storages under the agreement with the Beira Cold Storage. I need not detail the evidence from which this appears, it is clear from comparison of the two prospectuses. Yet under the changed conditions the promoters issued this certificate of alleged profits which it had been carefully explained to them could only be correct on the assumption that they were going to purchase the Railway Storages—and they had checked all the figures.

p. 306. The reasoning that applied to the rent seems to me also to apply to the interest on the £3,000 bond to the bank—if that was to be saved in the future the increased profit would be due not to the Beira Company, but to the extra capital provided to pay off this bond—and this, too, seems to have failed when the new company found themselves, as appears later, unprepared to pay off this bond—and this refusal of theirs to pay this bond of £3,000 has been the immediate cause of all this litigation.

It appears, therefore, that under the circumstances existing on March 5th, the certificates in the prospectus alleging the Beira profits at £3,274 was false, if it was not also false under the circumstances existing on February 4th, when the draft prospectus was printed.

It would appear, therefore, that the promoters who issued this prospectus containing this certificate, and who carefully "checked all the figures," when they now make allegations of misrepresentation against the Beira directors are rather throwing stones from a glazed habitation.

But it was not merely to show that the promoters of the defendant company committed the same sin that they lay to the account of others that I have gone at length into this alleged profit of £3,274, but to attempt to get at the real state of mind of these promoters in February, 1903, and to test whether they really so carefully examined this balance-sheet, and whether they based their calculation on it with the exactness of detail that they would now have us believe.

To sum this portion of the case, I say that the perusal of this balance-sheet and report shows to an ordinary mind a promising little company with a moderate capital of £22,000, with substantial assets, and making an annual profit of about 5 per cent., with cautious directors, who were refraining from paying dividends until the company should be well established. But that it was only a very wild imagination that from the perusal of this document could certify an annual profit of £3,274.

I now proceed to deal with the second point, viz., the circumstances under which this balance-sheet came into existence.

It appears that the Beira Cold Storage, Ltd., was a small company, chiefly owned by the directors themselves (see the share list put in).

The Attorney-General calls it a "family affair," and Mr. Martini, who was chairman in 1902, gives us to understand that he was the father of it.

It has originally been a mineral water and ice business, which they had developed into a cold storage business. (I understand from the evidence that under the new company it has practically returned to an ice and mineral water business.)

As a cold storage business they had worked in Beira since 1899, and in the latter part of 1901 they had extended their business to Salisbury, Rhodesia.

There had at one time been a fair demand for frozen meat in Beira, but this demand had fallen off, and at the latter end of 1901 and 1902 the principal sales were in Salisbury.

At March 31st, 1902, the Salisbury business had only been in existence about six months, and I agree with defendant's witnesses that the period was too short to form a fair estimate of the possibilities or probable profits of the Salisbury business. It was, in fact, in an experimental condition. p. 306.

The company was, as I said before, a small one, and was, in fact, the personal business of the directors, not only in the sense that they held nearly all the shares—but that they personally managed the business—each personally attending to the management of a department or section, thus reducing working expenses by saving salaries.

Mr. Coxwell has put forward his opinion that they were working with a view to refloating, and in support of this opinion he accuses them of intentionally neglecting to write off depreciation of their machinery, so as to make their profits appear large.

This is flatly denied by Mr. Martini and Von Hirschberg; they state that there was no idea of selling or refloating until they received the cable on August, to be referred to subsequently.

Having seen these gentlemen in the witness-box, I prefer to accept their denial in preference to Mr. Coxwell's suspicion.

Under these circumstances, the present plaintiff, who was then secretary of the company, proceeded in April, 1902, to make up his statement of accounts for the financial year ending March 31st, 1902.

This is the document attacked by the defendants, and which, according to them, was false and misleading.

I am satisfied that at the time that that balance-sheet was certified to be the auditor it was a correct account of the financial position of the company, as shown in the books.

I am also satisfied that it was issued by the directors as their bona-fide belief as to the position at 31st March, 1902.

In the light of subsequent events it is undisputed that that balance-sheet showed the position incorrectly with regard to two items, the rent, and the Waimate shipment—and there is now a difference of opinion as to whether sufficient depreciation was written off.

It will now be necessary to consider in detail the particulars annexed to the plea and those subsequently tendered,

These latter were objected to, and I was in some doubt as to accepting them, but ultimately I considered that they might as well go in as they did not seem to me to carry the case much further. Nos. 2 and 3 are not really new as I consider that the allegation in the original particulars to the effect that no sufficient depreciation had been written off is sufficient notice to plaintiff that the valuation of assets in the balance-sheet is challenged.

p. 307. No. 1 is fully disposed of by defendant's own witnesses in London.

Taking the items then in order—the first is the rent, which appears in the balance-sheet as "Provision for rent due on railway storages, £500." The accusation is that this was under-estimated by the amount of £98 7s. 7d.

The facts are now undisputed: The Beira Company had entered into a contract with the Railway Company (E. A. V. H. 30) for the lease of some cold storage chambers to be built at Beira and Salisbury. The rent is not fixed at a definite sum in the agreement, but was to be 8 per cent. of the cost of the buildings. The Beira Company took possession of the Salisbury buildings in November, 1901, and the Beira buildings in February, 1902. The exact rent payable was not ascertained, or, at all events, not made known to the Beira Company until June, 1902.

Under the circumstances the secretary, making up his books in April, 1902, put in an approximate estimate of £500 as rent due to March 31st. Subsequently in June it transpired that this figure should have been £598 7s. 7d.

This is the first misrepresentation complained of.

The second objection was to an alleged over-valuation of the Salisbury stock. This has now been abandoned by Mr. Russell, and he had to abandon it because each of his experts in turn, when faced with Mr. Von Hirschberg's explanation of the matter, had to admit that the objection was untenable. I shall only remark on it here that Mr. Binnie, the defendants' accountant, might have had that explanation at any time.

Mr. Evans, whose evidence impressed me very favourably, says that the persons connected with the Beira Company were always ready to give him any explanation he asked for—and he cannot understand Mr. Binnie's statement that it was impossible to obtain information because there was no one to inquire from—a statement made not once, but several times in Mr. Binnie's evidence. It seems that Martini, Diepeveen, and Von Hirschberg were in Beira at the time of the investigation, and the last named was anxious to meet Mr. Binnie to clear up any misunderstandings.

Again, when Binnie was investigating in Salisbury, Van Praagh actually approached his clerk, Ford, but was apparently choked off. Beira and Salisbury are small places, and the gentlemen mentioned by him are so well known that I cannot believe that Messrs. Deary and Suter could have told Mr. Binnie that there was no one from whom he could obtain information as to the affairs of this company.

One is driven to the conclusion that Mr. Binnie approached this investigation in a very prejudiced state of mind, and has only himself to blame that he did not receive the explanations which have now been given in Court.

The next item in the particulars is that no sufficient depreciation was written off. As I remarked before, Mr. Binnie when certifying the year's profit ignored the depreciation that was as a fact proposed by the directors. Now the complaint is that the depreciation written off is insufficient. It is difficult now—more than three years after the date—to say whether the allowance of £1,280 proposed by the directors was a fair amount at the time. Mr. Binnie's chief complaint was that the £2,000 for the previous year was an unscientific way of writing off. Evidence has been given of the present values of the plant and buildings. On this point the evidence of Anderson and Tetlow did not impress me favourably, and Coxwell, sworn valuator though he be, was not, in my opinion, in a position fairly to gauge the values in March, 1902. p. 308

I am of opinion that the depreciation written off was a fair one, and though possibly not exact, was sufficiently near the mark for the purposes that the directors then had in mind.

The next item is the bonus of £25 paid in April. This, Mr. Binnie guesses to have been for the previous year's working, charges of misrepresentation are not proved by guesses. There is no evidence to show what it was for, and therefore no reason given why it should be in the balance-sheet in question.

The next item is £835 4s. 2d. for what has been called the Waimate shipment, which does not appear in the balance-sheet, and which it is contended should increase the item of sundry debtors, and thereby decrease the profits shown. The explanation offered with regard to this item is as follows: In 1900 the company, through Lawley, then acting as their agent, purchased from the captain of the Waimate a shipment of frozen meat at a price to be calculated on the arrival of the Waimate in England at the ruling rate for meat in London at that date. The account for this meat was presented to Pauling and Co. in London, of which firm Lawley was a member. Pauling and Co. paid £1,335 4s. 2d., and sent their account to the Beira Company. The bookkeeper entered this amount at once to the credit of Pauling and Co. The directors contended, however, that at the ruling rate for meat in London at that date the amount should not have exceeded £1,000, the book-keeper accordingly made fresh entries so as to reduce the amount due to Pauling and Co. to £1,000. The dispute with regard to this matter continued for nearly two years, and by March 31st, 1902, it had not been settled. In May, 1902, the directors were forced to give way, and the additional £835 was paid to Pauling and Co.

Minutes of directors' meetings were put in to show that in November, 1901, and at subsequent dates the directors were discussing the possibility of settling this dispute by compromise or in some way, but it was not till May that the matter was actually settled.

A good deal of evidence was given as to whether this amount of £835 which was in dispute should have appeared in the balance-sheet as a liability or as a special suspense account.

I am quite satisfied that when the entries were made in March, 1901, the directors were honestly of opinion that £1,000 represented the extent of their liability, and as the amount was not settled till May, 1902, I am satisfied that no blame attaches to them or their bookkeeper for leaving the item at that in making up the accounts to March, 1902. It would, of course, have to be rectified in the next year's balance-sheet. Mr. Evans and Mr. Ford say in effect that as they were not paying out a dividend no harm attached to what they did provided the matter was mentioned at the general meeting, seeing that the balance-sheet had been already certified by the auditor before this settlement was arrived at, and as to mentioning it at the general meeting, it is necessary to remember the family party nature of this company, and that all present at the meeting were aware of what had been done. And in any case, it must be remembered that this entry would have effected the profits for 1901 only, and not the 1902 profits, on which the promoters of the defendant company were basing their prospectus.

The next item is the Customs House Bar. I am quite satisfied that in March, 1902, Mr. Martini had good reason to believe that they had something approaching a perpetual lease, and he was quite satisfied in placing on it the value he did, i.e., £1,100, less its proportion of the depreciation written off lands and buildings.

The fact that it was burned down in September, 1902, and was only insured for £500 had nothing to do with the balance-sheet in March, 1902.

Turning to the additional particulars: No. 2 has already been dealt with. No. 3 has nothing to do with the balance-sheet at its date. As to No. 1, I cannot follow the reasoning of the accountants.

This balance-sheet was not drawn for the purposes of a sale, but merely to show shareholders the assets and liabilities. I accept Mr. Duncan Cameron's evidence that it was quite proper for the purposes of this balance-sheet to place this bond under the heading "Sundry creditors." Whether it did in fact eventually deceive the purchasers will be dealt with afterwards.

I have come to the conclusion, then, that the balance-sheet as issued, together with the report, was at the time it was issued a fair bona fide statement of affairs, sufficient for the purpose for which it was brought into existence, i.e., for the information of their shareholders.

Following the reasoning in Peck v. Gurney, this balance-sheet when issued to shareholders had accomplished its purpose, and the directors would not be responsible to any other parties into whose hands it might accidentally come, and who might act on it and be misled on account of matters which subsequent events have shown to have been wrongly stated.

But this brings the position only to March, 1902.

We have to consider the position at the latter end of 1902 and the commencement of 1903, when the sale, the subject of this action, was effected.

The position of the company as shown in the balance-sheet had changed in three main particulars. They had discovered the exact amount of the rent to be paid. They had been compelled to pay Pauling and Co. £835 for a debt contracted in 1900, and the Customs House Bar had been burned down. If at that time the vendor company submitted this balance-sheet to the purchasing company as a true statement of their affairs without drawing attention to the alteration that subsequent circumstances had necessitated, and the purchasing company relied on the accuracy of this balance-sheet, and were induced by the figures in this balance-sheet to enter into the agreement, I certainly think they would be entitled to claim relief.

And this brings me to the third point, viz.: The manner in which this balance-sheet came into the hands of defendant company.

It is the basis of defendants' case that this balance-sheet was handed to Major Johnson, the originator of the new company, by Mr. Lawley, acting as the agent of the Beira Cold Storage, as a true statement of the financial position of the said company. The plaintiff denies that Lawley was the agent of the Beira Company in the matter of the sale, and repudiates Lawley's authority to make any representations on behalf of the company.

This question of Lawley's alleged agency is the critical part of defendant's case, and has to be determined by a consideration of all the circumstances of the case.

The defendants have produced no evidence that Lawley was ever in express terms appointed the agent of the Beira Company, but their case rather seems to be that Lawley in the first instance constituted himself the agent of the Beira Company, and that the said company afterwards accepted him as their agent, and thereby accepted responsibility for what he did.

The evidence to support this is: Firstly, Lawley was a director of the Beira Company; secondly, Major Johnson states that Lawley purported to act as agent of the Beira Company; thirdly, an inference drawn by Mr. Russell from the wording of certain cables that passed between Lawley and the Beira Board.

On the first point it can hardly be contended that a single director can commit the whole Board, especially when, as is shown in this case, his opinion in the matter and his interest in the matter is opposed to that of the rest of the Board.

On the second point—Major Johnson's memory is so inaccurate as to dates—as to the circumstances under which he discussed the matter with Mr. Lawley—as to the length of time that the negotiations took, and he has made such extraordinary statements with regard to other matters—notably the reason given by him for the delay in transferring the property he stated that the delay in the transfer was due to the methods of the Portuguese authorities (a most unwarranted attack upon the Government of a neighbouring State) and that plaintiff could not have reasonably expected transfer to go through till September, whereas it was shown that the delay was solely due to defendants' refusal to pay off a certain bond of £3,000 due to the Bank of Africa—that Mr. Cameron, agent for defendants, had the power of attorney and papers ready, and could have got transfer at any time if the bond was paid off, that I cannot accept his (Major Johnson's) mere statement on this point without further corroboration.

p. 311. But at the most his statement does not prove agency, supposing Lawley did purport to act as agent, he apparently produced no authority for so doing, and defendants can hardly put forward so extraordinary a proposition as that a self-constituted agent could bind persons who were not even aware that he was purporting to act as their agent. If Lawley purported to act as agent, it was Major Johnson's duty to ask him for his authority.

The defendants have selected not to call Lawley as a witness, though in the application for a Commission they mentioned him as one of the witnesses they intended to call, and from an affidavit made in connection with that application it appears that his evidence was available if required.

On the evidence before me I am not satisfied that at the earlier negotiations Lawley ever told Johnson that he had authority to act as agent for the Beira Company.

The defendants must rely on what they can find in the cables. In order to understand the cables it is necessary to review to a certain extent the origin of the defendant company and Major Johnson's negotiations with Mr. Lawley.

In 1902 Major Johnson, as chairman of the Scottish Africa Trust, had a considerable interest in two companies trading in Rhodesia, viz., Deary and Co., Ltd., and the Rhodesia Cold Storage of Bulawayo, and in negotiations with the head of the firm of Suter and Co., it was apparently decided to combine these three companies, and it was then thought advisable to get in also the Beira Cold Storage Company, and to get possession of certain cold storage plant that had recently been erected by the Beira and Mashonaland Railway Company at Beira and Salisbury, a further addition was proposed in the shape of an Australian Cattle Estate, and then, with a contract with the Imperial Cold Storage Company of Pretoria, Transvaal, which, though it is very little referred to in the case, was, to my mind, a very important element, he proposed to start a huge trading concern, which seemed to him to promise unlimited possibilities—see the glowing terms of the prospectus. But it was very important for his scheme to get possession of the Beira Company, or, if he could not do that on reasonable terms—to get it out of his way.

In this state of mind he approached Mr. Lawley, whom he knew to be a director of the Beira Company, and asked him about that company.

Lawley thereupon gave him that much discussed balance-sheet.

Here again we have only Major Johnson's account of what took place, and it does not tell us very much. He says Lawley gave him the balance-sheet, saying something like this: "Here is the last report I have received. Now you know as much as I do."

This seems to me very slender evidence on which to found the alleged representation that this balance-sheet accurately described the financial position of the company as it then was—assuming that Lawley was an agent authorised to make representations.

The balance-sheet on the face of it represented a state of affairs several months old, and Johnson cannot say that Lawley added one word to warrant that the present position was as then described.

However, Johnson propounds to Lawley his scheme for this huge combine. p. 312

Lawley, besides being a director of the Beira Company, is a large holder in Suter and Co., Ltd., one of the companies to be brought in.

Lawley approves the scheme—in fact, we find that he becomes associated with it as one of the promoters—his signature appears below the articles of association printed with the published prospectus, as associated with the four proposed directors, the trustees of the underwriters, and the solicitor for the underwriters.

He undertakes to recommend the scheme to his Board at Beira, and so we get the first cable, August 18th, 1902.

In this cable Lawley sets forth the proposed combine, recommends the Beira people to come in on practically a share for share basis—and asks for a power of attorney. The reply is a prompt refusal. At the same time the Beira people appeal by cable to the Administrator of Rhodesia, then in London to protect them in their possession of the railway cold storage plant.

The production of this cable was objected to by defendants, but I think in this case, where it is important to ascertain the state of mind of the Beira directors at that date, an act done by them at the time is admissible to corroborate their present statement that at that time they were not anxious to get rid of their business.

A few days afterwards Lawley cables: "Telegraph lowest terms; shall try to negotiate." The reply, dated August 28th, 1902, is: "Cannot assist in carrying out the scheme for amalgamation; am quite prepared to sell cash. You had better submit offer on above lines, which will be laid before the next Board meeting immediately."

After that cable the negotiations were suspended for nearly two months.

Up to this point I can find no acceptance by the Beira Company of Lawley as their agent.

Mr. Russell relies on Lawley's words "shall try to negotiate," and Mr. Martini's statement in the witness-box that he was quite agreeable to Lawley's negotiating as much as he pleased. But they refuse to send him a power of attorney, and they ask him to submit a cash offer to them, which they will consider.

This seems quite consistent with the position now taken up by Martini that they considered that they were dealing with Lawley as the proposed purchaser of their business, probably in conjunction with others, but as acting for himself and those probable others, and not as agent for the Beira Company.

They said they were led to this belief partly by the cables coming from him and partly by their knowledge of Lawley's large holding in Suter and Co.

On October 20th Lawley wires again:

"Strongly advise accept the terms offered."

No reply to this has been put in. It must be noted that Johnson and Lawley consulted together about the various cables, and at this stage it was decided between them to put a little gentle pressure upon the Beira people. The next cable, dated 29th October, is simply a threat that if the Beira Board will not come into the combine, Lawley will sell some of his own vacant land at Beira to the amalgamated company, who will start an opposition business. This has its effect. The Beira Board apparently find themselves driven into a corner, and after consultation with Lawley's representative at Beira they state the terms on which they are willing to sell, viz.: Share for share and 10s. per share in cash. p. 313.

The promoters of the new company try to beat them down, and Lawley proposes a variation of 5s. instead of 10s. per share, and again asks for a power of attorney.

The Beira Board adhere to their terms, and Martini incidentally wires that he considers business bright and improving. This is also alleged to be a misrepresentation, but I consider it simply an honest expression of Mr. Martini's opinion at the time, and is certainly not particular enough to warrant a charge of misrepresentation. I presume it is on this wire that the 3rd of the additional particulars is based. That particular can be at once dismissed.

On November 22nd Lawley again cables that he is still negotiating, and again asks for a power of attorney. This power of attorney is not sent to him, but eventually the bargain is concluded on the terms asked for by the Beira Company, and they send their power of attorney to the London manager of the Bank of Africa.

On this evidence I am asked to find that Lawley was the authorised agent of the Beira Board in opposition to the direct statement of the chairman and one of the Directors and the secretary of the Board that they never appointed him their agent, that they never imagined that he was acting as their agent, and that they would particularly have objected to his acting as their agent on account of the recent dispute re the Waimate shipment, and that they honestly believed he was the purchaser or the agent of the purchasers. Further, on December 5th, 1902, immediately after conclusion of the negotiations, Major Johnson writes to the manager of the Bank of Africa to the effect that they "will be prepared to take over the business of the Beira Cold Storage Company, on the terms arranged between Mr. A. L. Lawley and the Board of that company."

Surely if at that date Major Johnson believed that Mr. A. L. Lawley had in the negotiations acted as the agent of the Beira Company, he would have used very different language in his letter to the bank manager.

I am satisfied that Lawley never purported to be and never was the agent of the Beira Company in this matter, and that the idea of his agency is entirely an afterthought.

p. 314. But if Lawley never was the company's agent, in what way can the company be said to have handed their balance sheet to the defendant company? There is some vague evidence that the Beira Company knew that defendants were using this balance-sheet. Possibly when inquiries were made about the exchange item the directors if they thought of it might have known that the purchasing company had seen and were using the balance-sheet—as at that time they thought Lawley was the purchaser this would not be surprising.

But there was nothing to indicate to them that the figures on this old balance-sheet were being taken as the basis of the purchase price. And when we come to the actual agreement of February 10th, not only is there no mention of this balance-sheet as the basis of the contract, but the agreement departs from the balance-sheet by a difference of 635 shares in the purchase price.

The promoters of this new company, who lay so much stress upon the small discrepancies they find in this balance-sheet, were prepared to pay without question nearly £1,000 more than would have been the purchase price calculated on the balance-sheet.

Further, at the concluding stage of the negotiations they were so anxious to get the matter completed that they seem to have thought the difference between 5s. and 10s. per share hardly worth a contest, though it made a difference of £5,692 in the amount they were paying for this business.

On the whole evidence, I am not satisfied that the promoters of the new company did pay such attention to this balance-sheet, and did so absolutely rely on it as the plea contends.

They were engaged in a big scheme, and it was necessary for this scheme to get rid of the Beira Company. First they tried to get the Beira Company to come in on their (i.e., the promoters') terms. Failing that, they tried to purchase the railway cold storages over the heads of the Beira people, which would have effectually broken the Rhodesian portion of the Beira Company's business. There being some difficulty about that, they threatened, by the purchase of Lawley's land, to set up an opposition. This threat brought the Beira people to terms, but far from the Beira Company inducing the new company to buy, the evidence shows that the new company by a threat compelled the Beira Company to sell, and the new company were not at that time very particular as to what they paid as to a few thousands or so.

Major Johnson has told us of his contract with the Imperial Cold Storage, and we know that for five years the supplies for the company as far as Rhodesia is concerned were to be imported from the Imperial Cold Storage from Cape Town through Bulawayo, and not through Beira. And as we know that the Beira Company's chief sales were in Salisbury, this would at once render useless a lot of the Beira plant, for Beira we know from the evidence is not, owing to a falling off of the white population, in a position to support a cold storage business by itself, despite Major Johnson's statement that "it is almost a bigger town than any in Rhodesia," a statement he would hardly have made if he had given his evidence out here.

Incidentally, I may remark that as the Beira Cold Storage plant appears to have been practically standing idle for two years, except for the mineral water business, this fact may possibly explain the deteriorated condition in which Mr. Coxwell now says he finds it.

The big scheme of cold storage supplies for Rhodesia appears to have been p. 31a to some extent unsuccessful, not on account of any misrepresentations by the Beira Cold Storage Company, but, firstly, as hinted by Mr. Lyttelton Gell, that the failure to raise sufficient capital has necessitated the temporary abandonment of part of the scheme, and, secondly, because the demand for frozen supplies in Rhodesia has not risen to the magnitude prophesied in the prospectus.

Mr. Binnie tells us in one of his reports that there appears to have been a sufficient supply of fresh meat to seriously interfere with the demand for frozen meat.

For some reason not explained the new company were not prepared to pay off a bond of £3,000 due to the Bank of Africa. This delayed the transfer of the fixed assets of the Beira Company.

It is now alleged that the inclusion of this bond under the heading of sundry creditors in the balance-sheet misled the promoters of the new company—but I am perfectly satisfied from the evidence that the promoters in London knew of this bond before the agreement was signed, and in fact they never suggested in their plea or in their evidence in London that they were misled on this point. It is raised here by the local auditor, at the last moment. I think it may be dismissed.

But this delay prevented the delivery of the share consideration. The secretary of defendant company, in his letter of October 8th, 1903, to the Bank of Africa, speaks of "unavoidable delays in completing the transfer."

This is the only reason proved for the delay, and it was quite avoidable if defendant company were prepared to pay the bank.

It does not appear clear from the agreement on what grounds the new company were entitled to prevent Mr. Davis handing over the share consideration to the plaintiff pending completion of transfer, but apparently they have forbidden him to hand over the shares, and it is common cause on the pleadings that Mr. Davis now holds these shares in trust for both companies.

But the delay in handing over the shares enabled the directors to discover that their newly-acquired Beira business was a losing one. They ordered an investigation. As a result of that investigation they refuse to complete the contract, and through their secretary write a letter to the Bank of Africa making most serious charges of fraud, misrepresentation, and negligence against the directors of the Beira Company.

With regard to that letter I shall only say that in my opinion no fraud, no misrepresentation, and no negligence has been proved against the Beira directors.

In my opinion, the defendants have entirely failed to establish the case set up in paragraphs 3 and 4 of their plea.

p. 316. It was argued that there was no duty incumbent on defendants to inquire into the actual position of the Beira Company at the time of the sale. If actual representations were made to them by the vendor company, I can understand that there might be no duty on them to inquire into the truth of such representations. But inasmuch as the vendors were making no representations beyond Martini's vague cable that business was bright, I think they ought to have made some inquiry before they bought this business.

Von Hirschberg says that they (the Beira people) were on their side expecting an inquiry, and both Lawley and the firm of Suter and Co. were represented at Beira, and these representatives might at any time have obtained all the information which it is now alleged the Beira directors withheld.

I have come to the conclusion that defendants are really in the position of the purchaser in the hypothetical case suggested by Lord Romilly in his judgment, Charlesworth v. Jennings, who said, 'I do not care whether the concern is thriving or what may be the extent of its liabilities, I am willing to pay so much to get out,' and according to Lord Romilly, a purchaser who says that is bound by his agreement.

Under the old doctrine of laesio enormis, it is just possible that defendants might have claimed some relief, but on the facts before me I am satisfied that plaintiffs are entitled to succeed.

The plaintiff is therefore entitled to judgment on the first prayer of the declaration.

As the shares are in the Bank of Africa in London, I presume there will be no difficulty about their delivery, but judgment will be for the first prayer as set forth.

The second prayer is for damages for delay in delivering these shares. The shares should have been delivered two years ago, and were then of a substantial value.

We are told that now they are practically unsaleable. The delay has been wholly the fault of the defendant company.

The plaintiff did everything in his power to expedite matters, writing frequently to defendant's agents from April 24th, 1903, onwards, asking them to complete the transfer and deliver the shares. He was put off on various pretexts, and it was not until September 16th, 1903, he learnt through the Bank of Africa that defendants were not prepared to carry out the agreement.

Even after summons the defendants delayed the matter in every possible way. (See the various applications made to this Court during the last year.)

It is said that it is not usual to order damages as well as specific performance for breach of a contract of sale, but the Supreme Court has held there are exceptions to this rule, and non-delivery of shares is one of these exceptions— in such cases "the mere statement of the breach would be sufficient indication of the nature of the damages sustained and claimed" (Philip v. Metropolitan and Suburban Railway Co., 10 J., 55).

In the present case a judgment merely for the delivery now of these shares without damages for the delay would be a mockery.

The amount of the damages is more difficult to arrive at. In similar cases the damage is generally fixed at the difference between the selling price at the time when delivery should have been made and that at the time of action. But that assumes a market and a probability of sale at the price mentioned. Here we know that though a few shares were sold above par shortly after the flotation of the Company, it would have been impossible to sell 22,000 at anything like that price. But still some would have been sold at a good price and the rest would probably have been disposed of at decreasing prices. And the fault has been that of defendants. They by their failure to carry out their agreement have put it out of the power of plaintiff to show what he might have done with these shares, and they can hardly be heard now to say that he couldn't have sold them at any price.

The plaintiff claims damages at the rate of 10s. per share and though perhaps that is perhaps a rough estimate it may be taken as a fair calculation of

p. 317.

what might have been realised by the shares, seeing that at the date of breach they were nominally above par—anyhow it is defendants' fault that the matter was not put to the test.

Judgment will therefore be given also in terms of the second prayer.

The third prayer is based on the defendants undertaking to pay the costs of liquidating the Beira Company.

On this ground plaintiff claims £450 8s. 1d., but he has not produced evidence to support the claim.

Mr. Von Hirschberg put in a statement of his expenses up to date. Beyond his own fee as liquidator this statement consists largely of expenses connected with this litigation which the liquidator finds he cannot charge against defendants in his bill of costs between party and party. This is a roundabout way of trying to recover from the opposite party costs which the taxing officer disallows.

If I allowed these items to pass as expenses of liquidation the plaintiff would claim to recover the whole of his attorney and client costs in this action.

The earlier items of legal expenses before litigation may be accepted and these appear to amount to £50 8s. 1d. Add the liquidator's fee of £105, and the total costs of liquidation proved here will amount to £155 8s. 1d. for which amount the plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

The judgment will therefore be for plaintiff in terms of prayers 1 and 2 of the declaration and on prayer 3 for the sum of £155 8s. 1d.

Defendant must pay the costs, including costs of the commission.

Mr. Schreiner: The declaration has been twice amended—once after the argument in the Court below had been closed. Of course, we could not have pleaded to the amended declaration, and it would have been much more satisfactory had we had the original declaration before us.

[Maasdorp, J.: Had you been prepared to carry out your arrangement by a certain date, they would have done all they were bound to do.]

I cannot find that in the pleadings as they stand. The Bank of Africa was holding transfers in trust for both companies.

[Maasdorp, J.: Had they tendered transfer, would that have been sufficient?]

They never did so; and I am not prepared to say that that would have been sufficient. We admit the shares which we handed over in trust from the transfer. They do not allege that we did anything to hinder the transfer. The claim for £11,384 for shares is absurd. (See Agreement A, pars. 1 and 2.) The shares were divided into 7 per cent. preference shares and £11,384 paid-up shares of £1 each. (See A., para. 5 and 6.) By par. 10 sale and purchase were to be completed by March 20th. Clause 10 of the memorandum states that any person, corporate or otherwise, must pay interest, but how could such purchaser be liable for any interest if the sale and purchase were to be concluded on the same day. Here the completion of the contract does not mean transfer, but an actual handing over of the property.

[Buchana, A.C.J.: Then you say that the interest should run on the portion of these shares not delivered?]

Exactly, but the preference shares would not have paid the dividend. So far these shares have been unfruitful. In our Courts damages have never been awarded in addition to specific performance, save by way of loss of fructus. (See Article, Vol. 22, part 3 of "Cape Law Journal" and authorities therein cited.) Our old law in a case like this would not order specific performance but damages. Our law would order specific performance—Van der Byl v. Hanbury (2 Juta, 82). Till 1858 even the Court of Chancery could not order both specific performance and damages. (Fry on Specific Performance, sections 1,300 and 1,306; Main on Damages, ch. 21, p. 613.) In our law, if a man claims a thing he must take it. He may ask for fructus lost, but not for damages. The case of Kaiser Bros. goes as far as the Court has ever gone. Hutton v. Black Reef Mining Co. (7 Juta, 77). In that case Smith, J., dissented, and cited Williams v. Archer (17 C.P., 82), and Lippert v. Adler (5 Juta, 389). Smith, J., had previously dissented on a similar point. I can find no authority for the statement of Watermeyer, J., in that case as to the measure of damages. (See Philip v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (3 C.T.R., 55). Mitchell v. Sam Weil Syndicate (15 C.T.R., 217), where see the judgment of Maasdorp, J., at p. 220, in which he referred to Vort (19, 1, 20). That case is decisive in my favour. See also Silverton Estates v. Belleville Syndicate (Transv. Rep., 1904, p. 462), Frame v. Berg (Buch., 1879, p. 183), Kaiser Bros. v. Wesleyan Church (12 C.T.R., 147), Cohen v. Shirey, McHattie and King (1 Kotze, 41). As to the utilitas emptoris see Digest (19-1-121-3). The purchaser can claim only id quod interest. Damages he cannot claim, and that is exactly what the respondent Company are endeavouring to do.

[Counsel proceeded to discuss the evidence.]

Major Johnson was by no means clear as to the dates of his communications. That, however, is not the question. The real question is: Was Lawley an agent of the Company or not? The evidence at page 54 shows that he was an agent of the Beira Company. I cannot argue that a director is necessarily an agent for the purpose of committing the Company; but the Company, by Martini ratified the acts of Lawley. Johnson's evidence is uncontradicted. Lawley was a director and yet he seemed to be very hazy as to the balance-sheet. He knew that the report was not correct. I do not say that he acted fraudulently, but he was negligent. If he was an agent to negotiate, his acts are the acts of his Company. Von Hirschberg's evidence (pp. 20 and 212) shows that all the correspondence is not before the Court. The evidence on behalf of the Beira Company shows that the other company has their balance-sheet. The report of June 24th was false and misleading. Turning to Gell's evidence: it was favourably commented on by the Judge in the Court below (p. 59). Gell was a director of the Chartered Company, and must therefore have well known the value of a concession in Rhodesia. His evidence at p. 64 as to the prospects of purchasers is very important. Gell had not seen these cables, and so could not have been influenced by them. See judgment of Watermeyer, J., p. 309. That is quite in our favour. What is said at p. 16 does not seem to be entirely consistent, but this passage is the cruz of the whole judgment. If Lawley was an agent to negotiate for the Beira Company, his Lordship's conclusion was wrong, and the Rhodesia Company have a right to resist an action for specific performance. As to whether the balance-sheet led to the contract or not, that is a very simple point. His Lordship, however, looks to the prospectus. If the balance-sheet was faulty, the prospectus was still more so. Two wrongs cannot make a right. There is nothing to show that Lawley was a promoter of the company. The respondents must have had full knowledge of the balance-sheet at the time they negotiated with a view to purchase. The judgment seems to go on the ground that the balance-sheet and the report were contemporaneous; but in point of fact the date of the former was March 31st, 1902, and that of the latter June 24th.

[Counsel proceeded to deal with certain items of account on the balance-sheet.]

The balance-sheet was very misleading. The vendors show their gains, but the condition of the business is not correctly represented (see p. 22).

[Counsel further discussed the evidence; more particularly as to the dates relating to a certain bond due to the Bank of Africa, and cited Redgrave v. Hurd (20 Ch. D., 1, and 45, L.T., 485), where see judgment of Jessel, M.R.]

This case shows that if a representation is not true in point of fact, it is not necessary that there should have been fraud or even negligence in order that the contract may be set aside. Our Roman-Dutch Law stops with exceptio doli, and English law is gradually tending to this. That case is quite in my favour. Here we were induced to enter into a contract by a representation which was not true. See Reese Silver Mining Company v. Smith (4 H.L., 64). The whole point in these cases is the validity or otherwise of a contract entered into by reason of a misrepresentation. The liability of directors is a different matter.

[Hopley, J.: The Court is quite with you on that point.]

See Peek v. Gurney (6 H.L., 392, 403, and 43 Ch., 19). This case has no bearing on the present case, nor has Andrews v. Mockford (1 Q.B., 1896, 372); nor Derry v. Peek (14 Ap. Ca., 337); nor Newbiggen v. Adam (34 Ch. D., 594, and 59 L.T., 267). One of our own cases is Stellenbosch Municipality v. Hurd (3 Searle, 345). The facts in the case of Charlesworth v. Jennings (11 L.T., 439) are analogous to those in the present case. See especially the judgment of Romilly, M.R.

As to the third part of the judgment, affecting about £155: if we succeed, that must fall away; if we do not, I leave the matter in the hands of the Court. All the plaintiff company can obtain in any case is specific performance; they cannot claim damages as well.

Mr. Burton (for respondents): In our Courts misrepresentation does not avoid a contract unless it is fraudulent. For the appellants two technical points have been raised: (1) As to the state of the pleadings. (2) That transfer has never been given. These points were not raised in the Court below. We admit that legal transfer had not been completed, but the defendant company had physical possession. We did all we could do from April onwards. We did not delay the giving of transfer, but Johnson suggests that the Portuguese Government are very slow, and whatever delay there was was their fault. There is nothing in the agreement binding us to effect transfer within a certain time: see par. 6, p. 7. Their case is that we refuse to give transfer (par. 9 of the declaration. As to damages, we have no decision on that point, unless Mitchell v. Sam Weil Syndicate (15 C.T.R., 217) can be so considered. The judgment of the C.J. of the Transvaal in Silverton Estates v. Bellevue Syndicate (Trans. Rep., 1904, 466) is quite reconcileable with the decisions of our own Courts. I may remark that the reference there to Voet should be (22-1-28): the discussion begins at 22-1-24, and in par. 28 the writer holds that the person in mora is liable for fructus, id quod interest, and poenam conventam. The poenam conventam would here seem to refer to specific performance. As to id quod interest, see Voet (45-1-9). The whole question with us is whether the damages are or are not too remote, see Pothier, par. 466).

[Maasdorp, J.: You say that you are entitled to the difference between the profits which might have been made and the loss sustained?]

It admitted on the other side that compensation may be allowed for deterioration, and that would include depreciation: Philip v. Metropolitan Railway Company (3 C.T.R., 55) has been cited, but there the remark of De Villiers, C.J., on which stress has been laid, was only an obiter dictum, and the case went off on another issue. The case of Kaiser Bros. (also referred to) is in our favour, for there compensation was allowed. In Mitchell v. Weil Syndicate (15 C.T.R., 217) there was a tender. Voet was not contemplating specific performance, plus damages. That was merely a case of loss of profits. It is said that my clients might have claimed a rescission of the whole contract: but the contract has been partly performed, so there can be no question of restitutio in integrum. We are, therefore, justified in demanding that the contract should be completed, and also damages. The appellants in their replication do not ask for a rescission of the contract, but simply tender a quantity of comparatively valueless scrip.

[Counsel proceeded to argue on the measure of damages, and to contend that the damages were not remote. He cited Pothier on Contract of Sale (Art. 169), Wolff v. Pickering (5 C.T.R., 447), Lippert v. Adler (5 Juta, 389).]

As to damages, more particularly Gilchrist v. Stone (5 H.C., 353). See also Van Recnen v. Republican Gold Mining Company (Trans. Rep., 2 Kotzé, 236). Here we have a case in which the line between contract and tort is very fine. See Williams v. Archer (17 C.P., 82). This was a case of detinue: here we have a case of tort, but the distinction is very narrow. These shares were to be allotted in order that they might be dealt with. Secs. 4, 5, and 7 at p. 7. Time was evidently of the essence of the contract. Stewart v. Sichel and Others (4 Juta, 438). The defendants, in point of fact, were eager buyers. As to consequential damages, Niven v. Brady (6 Natal Rep., 20). If there was delay in giving transfer that was the fault of the appellants. See letter of August 12th, 1903 (p. 285). This letter clearly shows that the bank refused distribution until the auditor had made his investigations. Counsel takes up the line that they were not liable till the date of Johnson's letter. I contend that they were liable from August 12th, 1903. All we are bound to show is that these shares were sold on a certain date. The other side were wilfully in mora. Our market has been spoiled, and we have not made what we might have done had the shares been delivered to us when they ought to have been. We do not ask for rigorous compensation, but for fair compensation, and I submit that can only be given by awarding us both specific performance and substantial damages.

Mr. Schreiner was not heard in reply.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The discussion about the amalgamation of certain companies began in a most casual way. When Lawley handed over the balance-sheet of the Beira Company to Johnson he said: "You know as much about it as I do." Negotiations were not commenced with the Beira Company until after March, 1903. The first document was a cable from Lawley to the Beira Company, dated 15th August, 1902, where Lawley informed Martini that the Rhodesian Company had arranged amalgamation on certain terms. On this correspondence, it was alleged that Lawley was the agent of the Beira Company, and negotiated the transaction. As a matter of fact, the Beira Company did not sign any power of attorney to Lawley. He authorised the bank to deal for them in London. The contract was for the sale of the whole of the Beira Company's assets for the sum of £11,000 odd in cash and £22,000 in shares, half preference and half ordinary. This contract was guaranteed by Bartman, and the contract was to be completed by the 20th March. Shortly afterwards the £11,000 in cash was paid to the bank, and the shares were delivered to the bank; but it was alleged they were to be held by the bank pending transfer of the property. Some time in April the defendants took over all the assets of the Beira Company, and continued the business for a time. They did not take transfer of the immovable property situated in Portuguese territory, while the company was in liquidation the liquidator applied to know whether they had completed the transfer. When the pleadings in the action were drawn, both parties assumed that the transfer had been completed, but at the trial it was suddenly discovered that the transfer had not been passed, and leave was granted to the plaintiffs to amend their declaration. The only negotiation seemed to be between Johnson and Lawley. I am not prepared to admit that Lawley was ever authorised to bind the selling company in any way. The balance-sheet was incorrect, but with the exception of some small error it could not be regarded as fraudulent or misleading. The principal defence in the case was on the ground of misrepresentation by the selling company, and I think that the learned judge in the Court below was right in his decision on that part of the case. The first part of the judgment must stand, and the contract must go through. His lordship in the Court below was justified in saying that they must deliver the shares or pay the nominal value. I am not prepared to lay down as a general principle that when a person buying shares gets his shares he cannot claim for damages. The difficulty is to ascertain when the shares should have been delivered. The shares were handed over to the bank in April, and the selling company allowed the shares to remain in the bank and not to be handed over until transfer was given. There is no evidence to show that after October these shares could have been sold for anything at all. It is true a small number of shares were disposed of in England immediately after the company was floated, for above par down to 12s. 6d. in August or September, but it was not shown in this case that the plaintiff company, if they had got the shares, ever intended to dispose of them. The appeal will be allowed on the second claim for damages, and the judgment in the Court below altered to judgment on prayers (1) and (3); that is delivery of the shares and the amount of costs in liquidation, with costs in the Court below, the appellants to have their costs of appeal.

Maasdorp, J., and Hopley, J., concurred.

Water—Storm water—Respective rights of upper and lower riparian proprietors.

When water flowing into the channel of a river has once entered therein and joined the stream within the river banks, whether such water be a portion of the usual flow, or of freshets, or of more considerable floods after heavy rains: such water becomes part of the perennial stream and is subject to all rules regulating the user of the ordinary flow by the riparian proprietors.

The rule that an upper proprietor, after using a reasonable quantity of water for irrigation, must allow the surplus of such water to flow back into the stream, does not contemplate such return being made at any uncertain spot by percolation, but obliges him to return such water by a visible flow at some point in the stream above that at which it joins the property of the lower proprietor.

This was an action brought by Mr. Chas. Southey against Mr. William Southey, both being farmers in the Middelburg district, for a declaration of rights as to water rights on the Brak River. The river flows from the upper farm of the defendant, and then over that of the plaintiff's farm at Culmstock. The declaration was as in the following terms:

1. The parties are farmers resident in the Middelburg district, Cape Colony.

2. A public perennial stream, called the Brak River, rises on land above the farm Varkenskop, of which defendant is the registered owner, and flows on to and over the said farm on to and over the adjoining and lower farm Culmstock, of which the plaintiff, Charles William Southey, is the registered owner, and thence on to and over the adjoining farm Temple Farm.

3. The plaintiff as riparian proprietor upon the said stream was, and is, entitled to the user of a reasonable share of the water in the said stream.

4. For some years past up to the present time the defendant has been gradually from year to year by various works, constructed by him, taking more and more water out of the said stream. In the years 1876, 1893, and 1902 respectively the defendant constructed three solid mason weirs at different points across the said stream, and by means thereof and by furrows leading therefrom he has as aforesaid been diverting more and more water from the said stream, and by gradual means, viz., filling up the sluices, widening and deepening the furrows connected with the said weirs, spreading the water and heightening the furrows, he has placed large tracts of land, hitherto dry and still uncultivated, under irrigation, and in doing so has diverted large quantities of water away from the said stream, into an entirely different catchment area or watershed, and does not after user of the said water return the same into the said stream, the Brak River, and the said water is thereby wholly lost to the plaintiff.

5. In addition to the above works, the defendant in or about the year 1902 erected a windmill on the banks of the said river, at a spot below the said third weir, and by means thereof and of pipes laid from the said river, pumps and diverts from the said stream a considerable quantity of such water as there is below the said weir, and which water had up to that time always flowed in the said stream down to the plaintiff's land.

6. By reason of the said works the defendant has gradually been diverting more water than he is legally entitled to use, and the plaintiff has been gradually deprived of more and more of his reasonable share of the water in the said stream, and while the defendant has from year to year been using more water and placing more and more of his lands under irrigation, the plaintiff has gradually become more and more unable to cultivate his land and to raise crops thereon, and the plaintiff says that, especially from the year 1903 up to the present time, the defendant has wrongfully and unlawfully diverted from the stream and used more than his reasonable share of the water in the said stream, and has wrongfully and unlawfully diverted the said water into the aforesaid new watershed, and has not returned the said water after user into the said stream.

7. By reason of the premises the water so diverted has been and is wholly lost to the plaintiff, and he has been deprived of the user of a reasonable share of the said water, and has been unable to cultivate his lands as theretofore, to water his lucerne fields, and to raise his crops, and has suffered great loss and damage, to wit, the sum of £500, and the defendant continues to use and divert the water as aforesaid, and refuses to desist, and claims the right so to do.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims:

(a) An order declaring that he is entitled to the user of a reasonable share of the water in the said stream.

(b) An order declaring that the defendant is using, and is not entitled to use, more than a reasonable share of the water in the said stream, and directing the defendant to return to the stream water diverted therefrom after user by him.

(c) An interdict restraining the defendant from using more than a reasonable share of the water in the said stream and from diverting the water so that it is not returned into the said stream.

(d) The sum of £500 as and for damages.

(e) Alternative relief and costs of suit.

To this declaration the defendant pleaded as follows:

1. The defendant admits pars. 1, 2, and 3 of the declaration.

2. As to par. 4, defendant admits that he built two solid masonry weirs in the Brak River in the period referred to, but says that only one is used for diverting the defendant's share of the ordinary flow of the water in the river. The third weir was bought by defendant from an upper proprietor, with all the said proprietor's water rights in respect of the Brak River, but defendant has used it little, and for small quantities of water only.

3. Defendant admits that in the aforesaid period he has continued increasingly to divert on to Varkens Kop water from the said river, but such increased diversion has been in respect only of surplus flood water after good rains. The water so diverted on to Varkens Kop could not, owing to the quantity of the flood water and the lie of the country have been utilised by lower proprietors, and would have been waste water but for defendant's user. The defendant is almost entirely dependent on flood water to irrigate his crops.

4. By means of such diversion and of the manner in which the water diverted has been used for irrigation purposes on defendant's lands, the plaintiff's property has been greatly benefited and enhanced in value. The water, after use by defendant, has flowed on to plaintiff's lands, and the plaintiff has thereby been enabled to cultivate large tracts of land which otherwise he could not have cultivated; and the springs on plaintiff's lands have been greatly strengthened by the said diversion and use.

5. As to par. 5, the defendant admits having erected a windmill, and says that he did so for the proper enjoyment of his user of the water in the river. The piping was laid to economise the use of the water for watering stock, and no appreciable difference in the quantity of the water in the river is caused by the use of the windmill and piping. The defendant denies that a considerable quantity of water is so obtained.

6. As to par. 6, the defendant denies that he is or has been making, and does not claim that he can make unreasonable use of the water of the said river, and says that he has not been using or diverting the water (whether flood water or otherwise) to the extent to which he is in law entitled so to do. The defendant can flood the tracts of dry land referred to in the said paragraph at times only when the river is in such flood that there is far more water in the river than can be used by lower proprietors.

7. The defendant says that from the year 1903 to January, 1905, there was a severe drought, and such want of water as plaintiff may have experienced was due to the continuous dry season, and not to any wrongful user of the water in the river by defendant. From 14th March, 1904, to January, 1905, no water came down the Brak River, and defendant himself suffered severely from want of water, not only for irrigation, but for watering his stock.

8. As to par. 7, the defendant denies specially that plaintiff has suffered any damage for which defendant is in law liable. The defendant admits that he claims to be entitled (and is continuing) to use the water of the river as he has been doing.

9. Subject to the above, defendant denies pars. 4, 5, 6, and 7.

Wherefore, subject to the above, defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

The replication was general.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for plaintiff; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Close) for defendant.

Charles Southey stated that in 1871 his brother and himself bought undivided shares in Culmstock and Varkenskap, and ultimately his brother took over the latter farm. Culmstock was partly dependent on freshets and floods in 1871. He built a weir on his boundary in 1894 and 1895. In an ordinary flood, he got no benefit from the diverted water from weir No. 3. Not long ago the defendant began to cut a furrow out of that of the defendant, which ran on to the veld. That furrow, belonging to witness, irrigated the lucerne ground. An obstruction was also put up by the defendant to prevent the flood water flowing on to witness's farm. The water which the defendant stated benefited plaintiff's farm simply flooded the road, over which plaintiff had to drive. The effect of the defendant's works was to diminish witness's supply; it was rapidly decreasing. The windmill, he believed, was built in 1903. It pumped water from the river into two dams. At the end of 1904, witness had no water, and went up to examine the windmill. There were traces of the dam having overflowed its banks. In 1904, witness's lucerne died for want of water. The water never actually stopped previous to the erection of the windmill, but it had been getting weaker and weaker on account of the action of the windmill. Before February this year the windmill was almost constantly running, but since then it had practically stopped.

Re-examined by Sir H. Juta: This year he measured 25,000 gallons below the windmill which was practically useless for his lucerne land. Formerly it was 75,000 gallons. As far back as 1871 he had grown oats, and that was the principal product of the land.

Arthur Smythe said he was manager to the plaintiff since February, 1904, and before that he had been on an adjoining farm for four years. The water on Culmstock had recently been weakened. Witness re-sowed the lucerne this year. In October there was a good rain, but the river did not come down at Culmstock. Witness took the rain records at 8 o'clock each morning. On January 13 there was rain, but the water came down only slightly to Culmstock. Witness went up to Varkenskap, and saw water running over the veld. On several occasions when the river came down there was no water at Culmstock, while there was water on the adjoining farm. The lucerne had to be resown this year, partly for want of water.

Gert Kock, who lives above Varkenskap, stated he took water from the Brak River for his own farm. In October last water came down the river, and the water witness used passed on to Varkenskap. In January there was rain; the river passed him and went on to Varkenskap.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Although he could not give the date, he was positive there was rain in October.

Reginald Greaves, Government land surveyor gave evidence as to the plan he had drawn up.

Arthur Forbes, who is farming on a portion of the place in dispute, stated he had been there for the past eight years. He took particular interest in the result of this case, as the farm he was at present on had been willed to him by the landlady (his mother). Witness had proof that Mr. W. Southey had made his cutting to injure witness. When the flood was large it went on to the Thebus.

S. Montague Gadd, a farmer at Springfield, who is on good terms with both farmers, measured the water above the dam at the homestead (Weir No. 5). He did so in December, 1904, and it was 15,120 gallons in twelve hours. Weir No. 4 was dry. Lucerne was grown on the farm.

Wilfred Southey, nephew to the parties concerned in this action, gave evidence for the plaintiff. After further evidence, Sir H. Juta closed his case.

William Southey, the defendant, was examined at considerable length on plans and photographs of the farm. He stated that the dam was often dry for nine months in the year. It was a large, shallow dam, and very quickly dried up. The water in the case of extraordinary floods would run into the Brak River at the junction of the two rivers. Any water that came on to the Temple Farm in that way would find its way to the Brak, and not to the Thebus River. For the properties that he purchased subsequently he had not a solitary drop of water. Witness denied that he had made a cutting to take off lucerne during the year depended on the supply of water, but witness could not say how often it could be cut in an average season, as in his farm he had never experienced an average season.

Frederick Southey, a son of the defendant, said he asked Forbes to show him the cutting that he and the "old boss" had an argument about. If the water came through the cutting above 100 morgen could be cultivated. Witness had seen traces of water on the veld at that spot. Anderson pointed out that there was weed there. On Anderson's suggestion they returned to the dam that pushes back on Culmstock. There was a strong stream of clear water running into the dam. It was ridiculous to say that the water was the result of a flood or a freshet. The river was absolutely dry where he crossed it. At Forbes's place there was sufficient force of water in the river to fill a 3 in. pipe. When witness was a lad there was cultivation on the abandoned lands, but there never was a good crop. He could easily distinguish river water from brak water by the colour.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: There was a good strong flow into the weir at Forbes's farm. Fifty acres could have been irrigated in that stream. The lucerne was not in a good condition; it might have been fed off. He did not know that the present was a good year. He did not go down with Mr. Anderson for the purpose of giving evidence; he merely went down to show Mr. Anderson round. On the abandoned ground he could only remember some mealies or pumpkins.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: He saw Forbes's evidence in a newspaper, and he was determined to see for himself.

Petrus Jacobus Venter, farmer, who was in the employ of Mr. Forbes for about 14 months up till April, 1905, said he knew the cutting on the veld. He had seen about two morgen of Mr. Forbes's ground wetted from Mr. Wm. Southey's farm. Witness made the cutting, and only remembered water coming down it once. The day witness finished the cutting, which he believed was in January, the river was down on Temple farm. The river came right over the dam. It was so full that the cows had to swim over. The flood water from the defendant's farm must come down to the Brak River. Some time this year there was a thunderstorm over the Brak River. The rain lasted about 20 or 25 minutes. When witness returned to the farm the road was full of red water, so were the river and the sluits.

Henry Trollip stated that after the flood of 1874 the water grew stronger for a couple of years. After the flood of 1874 the river flowed for a year. From 1895 the water gradually weakened. He would not consider the abandoned lands good soil. He was not under the impression that the defendant's works were constructed to take more water than years ago.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: It was the custom of the upper proprietor to take all the water he could make use of. Witness was an upper and lower proprietor, but the upper farmers in his case had not the works to take an unfair share of water.

Herbert Collett, farmer, residing at Saltpansdrift, on the Brak River, stated his farm was where the Fish and the Brak Rivers united. Witness was president of the Cradock Farmers' Association, and had been farming by himself for twenty years. He was on good terms with the plaintiff and the defendant. He was familiar with Culmstock, Varkenskop, and Temple Farm. About the beginning of May he went to see Varkenskop. Witness went in company with Mr. W. Southey to see where the water would run at the nineteen foot furrow at No. 2 weir. He saw by the grass that there had been flooding. The flooding done by the defendant did not appear to be in any way excessive. The river was dry at the time. Every man took as much flood water as he possibly could, whether it was a freshet or a flood. It would not be practicable to divide a small freshet. In this case it was better for the upper proprietor to take as much flood water as he could, and establish a permanent supply below. The upper proprietor never thought of the lower proprietor.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: He was the person who had a scheme for supplying Cradock with a water supply, and that would mean the diversion of a deal of water from the river. He would not say he was vitally interested that the case should not go against the defendant. He had never seen the defendant turning out the water when the river came down. He could not say how long it took to fill the dams. There were any amount of degrees between a small freshet and a big flood that would reach the lower neighbours.

By Maasdorp, J.: The Cradock scheme would be a flood scheme. The idea was to pipe it into a large reservoir.

Edmund Wainwright, farmer, at present of Queen's Town, said he formerly farmed at Culmstock, then known as Kliprift, from 1865 until after 1868. In August last he revisited the place, when Mr. W. Rubidge was there. Then he made an inspection as to the use of water on both farms. Witness was farming the west of the river. At that time there was a dam he took the water from. The homestead lands which the plaintiff had now were at present more irrigated than in witness's time. The lands witness had at the homestead were watered from the weir; water was very scarce. The permanent water on Culmstock in August was much more than in witness's time. He was fairly familiar with Varkenskop, the irrigation on which had increased greatly. In August he saw the lucerne lands of both parties. There was not a drop of flood water. Witness saw no perennial water at Varkenskop. He saw water at weir 2, but he did not know where it came from. The sluices were all down at weir 1, but he did not see any water. The condition of the lucerne on both homesteads was about equal. There was a little water at the windmill. There was no indication that there had been irrigation from the dams. Witness was positive there was a very fine stream of water at No. 4. As the defendant took the flood water, it would strengthen the springs below. Witness was of opinion that the defendant benefited Culmstock.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The farmers on the east side used the water out of the Brakke River. There was a cutting near the homestead that was cut further back. There was practically no cultivation at Cawood when witness was there; now there was lucerne. He did not know what perennial water there was at Varkenskop in Cawood's time. Witness was not entirely dependent on freshets. In the early days it was very probable the weirs were much smaller than they were at present.

Walter Rubidge, farmer, residing in the district of Graaff-Reinet, said he had close on forty years' experience of farming. He was a member of Parliament for Vryburg. He would consider himself a fortunate lower proprietor. Both parties to the suit were friends of his. Witness took a great interest in the irrigation question. During the present year he was asked to inspect Culmstock and Varkenskop. In 1868, witness saw Culmstock. Witness had been to the farms on and off since then. In August last witness was on the farms, and also on last Saturday. Here and there he took measurements of the weirs and sluices in August. There was no water in the river. The water-works of both parties were inspected, with the exception of the works made from the Rooi Spruit. To the best of his recollection, the water was still in the dam at weir No. 1. The furrow from weir No. 2 was blocked up; it would only take flood water on the east. There was just a little oozing of water in the river bed below weir No. 2. The furrow on the west, at weir No. 3, would take water down to the vlei. That was simply a construction to take flood water; he had never seen perennial water there. The dams at the windmill could not be used for irrigation. There was no indication that the veld, through carelessness, was watered from the dams. At the deep footpath and a little below it there was a clear stream—apparently permanent. About 100,000 gallons were flowing at the deep footpath. The water might percolate down, but it must go down to the plaintiff's dam. The Rooi Spruit would go to Varkenskop, and then to Culmstock. The lucerne at plaintiff's homestead lands showed signs of growth. In 1904 the ostriches were dying on the defendant's farm. In August this year he saw a splendid supply of water below weir 4, on the plaintiff's farm. The water at the cutting was between 60,000 and 80,000 gallons. Culmstock was decidedly better off for water than Varkenskop. There was a great deal more water at Culmstock now than when he visited it in 1868-1869, and then there was an exceptionally good season. He would not say, judging by the lucerne, that the plaintiff had suffered a great deal of damage. Much more could be done to take water from the Rooi Spruit when it was flooded. It would be a dangerous experiment to attempt to irrigate the flood from the eastern side of weir 4 on account of the ground being very steep and full of sluits. It would be more convenient to flood the new lucerne lands from the Rooi Spruit than the river. The furrow from the weir was decidedly not a flooding furrow. Varkenskop was almost entirely dependent on flooding. With a sharp thunderstorm over the catchment area, it would take a considerable quantity of water to fill the dam at Grasbult. All such water was now cut off by the flooding water. Crossing the bridge towards Schoombie Station, he noticed the bed of the river was wet. Witness corroborated Mr. Collett on that point. Below Temple Farm, in the Brakke River, there was about 100,000 gallons of clear water flowing. The water from Grasbult would go to the Thebus River. The lucerne lands at Forbes's farm were in fairly good condition. The water was standing well back, and Forbes said it was about four feet deep. Forbes said the water came from the banks of the river up to the willow tree. The cutting on that farm would put a large area under irrigation. Witness could see that water had been over about 100 acres. Four or five acres were distinctly marked, and witness asked him if that was the piece he described as big as the Court-house, and remarked that was a big Court-house. He estimated 200,000 gallons at the least was flowing into Forbes's dam. The water was perfectly clear. There was a considerable flow of water from weir number five, irrigating the homestead lands of the plaintiff. The defendant, in his opinion, did not make excessive use of flood water. A small freshet coming down the river would not be capable of division. He would not like to undertake a fair division of the flood water. The quantity and velocity being so uncertain. With a permanent flow it would be possible. He certainly thought it was to the benefit of the lower proprietors that the defendant should take the flood water as he did; it strengthened the underground sources.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: Last year there were two lucerne lands with very nice stacks on the defendant's farm, but he could not explain why the ostriches were dying. There was nothing to show that the water had overflowed at the two small dams at the windmill. He was not prepared to say that Mr. Charles Southey suffered no damage to his lucerne.

Walter Haltz, farmer, of the district of Wodehouse, stated he knew the parties to the suit very casually. Never before the 17th of this month had he been to Culmstock. He had a great deal of experience of waterworks, and was part proprietor in the Carnarvon dam. He had some experience of the measurement of flowing water. He came to Varkenskop at the invitation of the defendant, and saw weirs 1, 2, and 3. That afternoon he estimated the flow at weir number 1 at 30,000 to 35,000 gallons. There was no running flood water in the river. The flood furrow on the east appeared to him to be a reasonable construction for taking flood water. There was no water between weirs numbers 2 and 3. Going across the railway bridge later on he noticed a little water from a freshet up above. He corroborated the evidence given by Mr. Collett and Mr. Rubidge as to what they saw and what Mr. Forbes had said. Near Forbes cutting, about three or four acres showed traces of having been flooded, and lower down fifty or sixty morgen, though not so clear had apparently been flooded. The largest permanent perennial stream he had seen was above Forbes's dam on Culmstock, consisting of about 200,000 gallons. He took it as a permanent stream. The flood water must go back to the Brakke River. The permanent water for Culmstock was infinitely more than that on Varkenskop. The water above Weir 3 and below Weir 4 was found to be strengthened by percolation of the flood water. There were standing pools at the windmill. There was nothing unusual there; if the dams had been his he would have had them made a little large. There was no trace that the dam had overflowed. If the cutting was not obstructed at Weir 4 by the bank the water would go into the Brakke River. All the lucerne they saw was in a reasonably good condition. He could not see any practicable scheme that would divide the small freshets. It was very much more important to have permanent water instead of flood waters, and he considered the defendant was materially benefiting the plaintiff. To lay down a rule as to the divisions of flood water would be unpracticable and unjust. It was incidental to flood irrigation to take the smaller freshets.

Cross-examined by Sir H. Juta: The water he saw flowing into Weir No. 1 had all the appearance of being a permanent stream. The strength of the water varied very much. A fairly good idea could be formed as to the volume of water required to go down the river to Culmstock. It was difficult to know where the water in a deep hole in the bed of the river below Weir 3 went to, but in the grasbult side it would percolate towards the lowest place. He did not see the oozing in dam No. 2.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The catchment area of from three to four square miles was a particularly good catchment for impounding water. The whole thing seemed to him to be a case of the value of surface flooding.

The witness proceeded to say that had he been in the place of the lower proprietor he would have joined hands with the top man and helped to pay expense to make his weirs, dams, etc., as strong as possible, and keep all the water on the land for the purpose of establishing permanent spring streams.

Frederick William Pack, formerly a tutor at Varkenskop stated Mr. Oscar Southey was a pupil of his. He was there from November, 1894, to January, 1901. He taught Mr. Oscar Southey how to take rain-gauges. Oscar Southey made some of the entries in the book and witness made some. The entries were absolutely correct. Witness deposed to the accuracy of particular entries which he remembered as being associated with certain incidents, one being the visit of the Governor, and another an occasion on which photographs (produced) were taken. These photographs were taken at a time when there was a small flow. The river usually went over No. 3 weir. The entry in the book, "river down," was, as a rule, made when the water went over Weir No. 3, but it did not always mean that.

Charles Southey (recalled) stated that the cutting above Weir 4 was with the intention of taking flood-water on to the vlei from the river. Its appearance might easily deceive Mr. Rubidge. The work was not abandoned.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Sir H. Juta: The defence raised in the plea does not agree with the line adopted by the defence in the course of the case. The plea alleges that this river is a public perennial stream. The defendant admits that we are entitled to a reasonable share of the water; but in spite of this admission he has diverted an unreasonable quantity. In our declaration we make no distinction between flood water and the ordinary flow. The defendant in his plea makes no distinction, but admitting the diversion of the water, he said it was "surplus flood water." He admits that he can flood dry tracts of land only when the lower proprietors cannot use the water. He does not claim the right to divert small floods or freshets. He says nothing about a watershed, but says that he returns the water to the stream. He now claims to take all the flood water he can get. That is quite a different case from the one set up in the plea. At last he denies that this river is a perennial stream, save as between himself and Schoombie. The evidence shows that some of the water of this river flows in a defined underground channel. The defendant now says that we are not entitled to any increase of water resulting from rains, and that in respect of such increased flow he is dominus fluminis. Every public perennial stream varies much in force at various seasons; but where does the defendant wish to draw the line; and how much water does he say must be in the river before he can deprive us of our pro rata share of water? What is "usual and permanent flow"? A man is entitled to do as he likes with the rain water which falls on his land, provided it does not find its way into the channel of a public perennial stream; but if it does that, he is in no better position than any other riparian proprietor. The evidence shows that this river is largely dependent on rains. It is said that when water comes down all the upper proprietors take all they can. That may have been so, but in the days to which that evidence refers dams had not been built to enable an upper proprietor to take all the water. In this case huge works have been constructed so as to enable the defendant to turn a large quantity of water on to his dry veld lands. He now seems to say that he is entitled to all the water in the river, save spring water; but springs depend on rains, and I can find no authority for drawing any distinction between rain water and spring water in a river. The defendant says that the lie of the land is such that the water put on his veld must find its way back to the river. As far as the eastern side is concerned, it is returned to the river at a place where it cannot be used. An upper proprietor may not return the water wheresoever he pleases on the land of the lower proprietor. He must return it into the stream at a point above where the stream reaches the lands of the lower proprietor. In this case the water would not naturally flow on to defendant's veld, but on to our ground. It has been artificially diverted. Water will not percolate through barren veld unless it is poured on it in very large quantities. In this case we have no evidence as to percolation and return of the water to the river. Water will not percolate through land which is not constantly irrigated.

Then as to the weirs. There are three of them, and what Nos. 1 and 2 do not catch No. 3 does.

[Counsel described the construction of these weirs and certain beams connected with them, which obstruct the flow of water. Counsel also dealt with other portions of the evidence with a view of showing that often when there was practically no water in the Brak River defendant's farm was flooded, while that of plaintiff had no water.]

We have suffered damages, and defendant should not be allowed to use this unreasonable quantity of water; and I submit that if the Court is with me in this, it will leave the parties to settle their differences, either by arbitration or by the judgment of a Water Court. I cannot find any authorities in our law to warrant any distinction between ordinary flow and flood water in a perennial stream: but see the judgment of Kotzé, C.J., in Meyer and Others v. Johannesburg Waterworks Company (reported in "Cape Law Journal" for 1893, p. 159); Angell on Watercourses, p. 544, where see judgment of Tentorden, L.Ch. (this case is reported 1 B. and A., 874 and 887); Broudbent v. Ramsbottom (11 Exch., 615), Coulson and Forbes (Law of Waters, p. 136), dealing with the obligation of receiving flood waters—are all in favour of my contention, viz., that flood waters are an integral part of a public stream. See also Struben v. Collett (9 C.T.R., 620), particularly the judgment of De Villiers, C.J.

[Maasdorp, J.: In that case the question of flood water was not discussed.]

No, but the matter was alluded to. See also Struben v. Cape District Waterworks Company (9 Juta, 68); Hiscock v. De Wet (1 Ap. Ca., 58). A man may do what he likes with water falling on his own ground until it goes into a public stream, but not after that, and he must not divert the water of such stream.

Mr. Schreiner: The trend of my argument will be to show (1) that the defendant is not bound to allow flood water to flow down below his land. (2) That even if such an obligation be incumbent upon him, he has not made an unreasonable use of the water.

The first of these points has never been decided in the Courts of this colony. A man may claim aqua superflua on his land by the title of occupatio, just as he may claim ferac naturæ or any other wild thing. I contend that flood water in a river is subject to the same rules as water on a man's land. His title is occupatio. He can take it, and do as he likes with it. Institutes of the Law of Cape Colony, by Maasdorp, C.J. (Bk. 2, Ch. 13). He there refers to De Pascoe v. Rawson (1 Roscoe, 133), and to Struben v. Cape Town Waterworks (9 Juta, 68). See this case also as to water flowing by a subterranean passage. I wish to show that my contention is based on Common Law authorities, that the principles I advance are founded on right reason, and that no decision of this or any other Court of this country is against me. Counsel for the plaintiff pleads dearth of authority to support his contention. As plaintiff he was bound to prove his case by authority. I have found authority for my position. Voet (43-13). Assuming our judicial made law as to water in the summer season, there is no authority for the granting of an interdict to make the water "flow otherwise (aliter) than it did in the previous summer season." We have had the use of this water for several summer seasons. Voet regards the summer flow as the natural normal flow. But my point is that the year is here divided into summer and winter, and the time when water is scarce must be regarded as that of the normal flow. The passage I have cited is by no means obsolete; though it is true that in Hough v. Van der Merwe (Buch., 1874, p. 148) one of our then judges criticises this title as somewhat inconsistent with Voet (39-3-1). But that refers to the right of the lower proprietor to keep off water. His Lordship's criticism on that point shows that he was not thinking of storm water. See his remarks on Dig. (8-3-17): "Flood-water means water in the watercourse. Of course, everybody may do as he likes with overflow water which runs on to his land." In our plea, by "flood-water" we do not mean only water coming down after big floods. In par. 6 of our plea we allude only to special portions of our land. The river can come down only after heavy rains. The levels are such that we could not take water from the ordinary flow either at weir No. 2 or No. 3. All authorities speak of the ordinary flow as something ascertainable with precision. Retief v. Louw (Buch. Ap., 1874, p. 165) may be regarded as overruled by Hough v. Van der Merwe (Buch., 1874, Ap., 148). See particularly the tests as to proper user by the upper proprietor. My contentions are (1) that we are entitled to take all the flood water we can get. (2) That no decision has ever yet determined the use we may make of it. In Retief v. Louw (Buch., Ap., 1874, p. 165) there was no question of storm-water, but of streams which hardly flowed at all. See the judgment of Cloete, J., Grotius (2-35-15), Nathan "Common Law of South Africa" (Vol. 1, pp. 486, par. 19). The author there summarises Voet 39-3 and 4. All our Roman-Dutch authorities deal with the question of storm water under the title "De aquam pulvise arcendo. There is a remedy against me if I turn my, storm water on to my neighbour's land, but he has no remedy if I keep it off his land, no matter how useful he might have found it. His only remedy is given in Voet 43-13, which has nothing to do with storm water. See also Voet (8-3-6), Dig. (39-3-11 and 21), Van Leeuwin Cens. Foren. (2-1-6) on title by occupation and flowing streams. The sole authority against me is the case of Meyer and Others v. Johannesburg Waterworks ("Cape Law Journal" for 1893, p. 159). The judgment of Kotzé, C.J., was delivered soon after Struben v. Cape Waterworks. Evidently His Lordship had studied this latter case, and did not approve of the judgment (see "Cape Law Journal," part 2, vol. 10, p. 167). Here the channel from which the flood water was taken was on defendant's own property, and if a man denies the rights of another to do something on his own property, he who denies must prove the restriction. The rights of lower proprietors to ordinary water cannot be extended to storm water. Struben v. Cape Waterworks Company quite supports my contention.

[Maasdorp, J.: What is the exception to a man's right to deal with water on his own land?]

It is stated in Vermaak v. Palmer (Buch., 1876, p. 25). That case was commented on in Jordaan v. Winkelman (Buch. 1879, p. 79). See Burge (vol. 3, p. 421), where he cites Cod., 3-4-47). All authorities speak of a source when speaking of a river; but we cannot speak of the source of flood water. In Vermaak v. Palmer, De Villiers, C.J., refers to Voet (8-3-6) citing Cod. (3-34-10). In Struben's case he said that underground water is in the same position as storm water, citing Dig. (39-3-21). Mouton v. Van der Merwe (Buch., 1876, p. 18) did not turn on the question of prescription, but on user exercised without restraint—Voet (39-3-5). In Jordaan v. Winkelman, the leading case on prescription, Vermaak v. Palmer, was strongly relied upon. Existimatio circumcolutium is the best test as to whether a stream is public or private, and hence the importance of the evidence of local witnesses. Hoff v. Van der Merwe evidently deals with the accustomed flow. If the lower proprietors on the Liesbeek River had had a right to storm water, it would not have been so necessary to discuss what was "accustomed flow" or to limit the interdict so strictly to "accustomed flow." Van Heerden v. Visser (1 Ap., 5) again deals with limitations of the rights of an upper proprietor to water. There the appeal was dismissed, but see the judgment of De Villiers, C.J. Voet (43-12) must be read in the light of this judgment. As to what is a public river, see Dig. (43-12-1). As to the windmill, we say that by its means we have taken only water for ordinary use for cattle, but the plaintiff says that we have used the water extravagantly.

[Maasdorp, J.: If the defendant says that he can take all the flood water, why does he raise the point that he returns it to the river?]

Weir No. 1 takes none of the ordinary water. Nos. 2 and 3 take only what he is entitled to. Between weirs Nos. 2 and 3 there is never any flow on the surface. Below No. 3 the surface flow reappears. It is our right under our former judgment, and in virtue of our purchase from Schoombie, to take all the water at weir No. 2.

[Maasdorp, J.: You seem to divide this river into several public perennial streams.]

That is so; below No. 3 it is a perennial stream.

[Maasdorp, J.: If it is not perennial above that, of course you are entitled to all the water.]

It is perennial in a sense. It goes down to No. 2, and then is lost till it rises below No. 3, but we say that the springs below No. 3 are caused by our flooding operations.

[Maasdorp, J.: I think the evidence shows that the stream is perennial, but you cannot break it up into sections.]

Then we say that our weirs do not obstruct all the water. Some goes under the weirs and reappears on plaintiff's property. This is a case in which the plaintiff has acquiesced, and volenti non fit injuria. See Voet (39-3-5). This passage will help us in considering the case at large. The plaintiff knows that weir No. 1 was built in 1872. Weir No. 2 is 20 years old.

[Counsel dealt with the evidence as to the quantity of water taken out of the stream by the defendant, and the means whereby it is removed, and proceeded to argue the consent of the plaintiff from the fact that there had never been a denuntiatio novi operis.]

The plaintiff was not quite sure that the weirs were not an advantage to him. True, he found many years afterwards that they were not; but he cannot go back on his previous belief. He has brought no action de damno infecto; he lies by nearly thirty years, and now comes forward and objects, and virtually claims a better position than that of a dominus fluminis. The right of a lower proprietor is not a servitude; it arises ex natura loci. Edmonds v. Scheepers (1 Juta, 317). This is a clear case of lying by. The doctrine on this point which applies to a registered servitude, applies a fortiori to a mere right of user. Even a dominant tenement cannot after so many years demand the removal of works constructed by the servient tenement; much less can a man do so who has a mere right of user. It is impossible to apportion flood water. It is a quid incertum. To attempt to do anything of the kind would be to put a stop to the defendant's enterprise, without benefitting anybody else. Plaintiff has been content to lie by, and qui tacet consentire videtur.

[Counsel proceeded to deal with the correspondence, and with various facts of the case.]

Sir H. Juta (in reply): In my argument in chief, I said that I could find no authority for the opinion that water which once finds its way into a public stream is not part and parcel of that stream. You cannot divide that water in a stream into layers, and say "so much is ordinary flow, and so much is storm water." No legal authority has been cited on the other side for any such proposition. Counsel relies on Voet (43, 13), and Col. (8, 6, 3). These were relied upon in Howe v. Van der Merwe. These authorities have since been discredited, and if they are to be upheld, all our later decisions as to water rights are wrong. What is "customary flow"? Every stream begins with a fountain, and is augmented by tributaries. It has been argued on the other side that tributaries are aquae fluviae, and hence the only customary flow must be that derived from the fans. In what other way can the customary flow be gauged? Counsel sees this difficulty, and takes refuge in Voet (43, 13). That passage does not consist with our law, since, according to us, if a stream dries up, it does not necessarily cease to be a public perennial stream.

[Maasdorp, J.: Voet is going back on Roman Law.]

If a rainfall is to make no difference in the customary flow, what becomes of water coming from rains, which cause the river to flow again after a period of drought?

[Maasdorp, J.: Permanent waters are produced by soakages.]

Just so. But let us suppose that 1903 was an exceptionally dry year; 1904 was wet, but in 1905 the flow of water was weak. In such a case the upper proprietor can take in 1904 all the water, save such as ran in 1903. In 1905 the lower proprietor can insist that the water should come down as it did in 1904, and then the upper proprietor will get nothing. According to Van Schalwyk v. Herman (14 S.C.R., 214), in times of scarcity each proprietor must abate. As to the interdict, "Ne quid fiat in flumine publico, etc.," Pothier translates "uliter" as referring to a different course of the stream, and not to any change of the volume of water therein. (See the latter part of the Edict). Such an interpretation does away with all inconsistencies which the Roman Law may appear to present to our own law. Hence this passage of the Edict has nothing to do with this case. As to occupancy see the latter part of Story's judgment, given in Gale on Easements (p. 205).

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (December 15).

Maasdorp, J., said: The plaintiff is the owner of the farm Culmstock, which adjoins the farm Barkemkop, of the defendant, and a perennial stream called the Brak River, after flowing through the land of the defendant, passes through that of the plaintiff. The plaintiff states in his declaration that he as riparian proprietor upon the said river, is entitled to the use of a reasonable share of the water in the stream, and he complains that for some years past up to the present time, the defendant has been gradually, from year to year, by various works constructed by him, taking more and more water out of the stream, by means of which he has placed large tracts of land, hitherto dry and still uncultivated, under irrigation. He says the defendant has diverted large quantities of water from the stream into an entirely different catchment area or watershed, and does not after user of the water return the same into the river again. That the defendant also draws a large quantity of water out of the stream by means of a windmill. That in the result the defendant takes more than a reasonable share of the water, to the injury of the plaintiff, who is unable to cultivate his lands as he used to, or to water his lucerne fields, and has consequently suffered damage in the sum of £500. He asks (a) an order declaring that he is entitled to the user of a reasonable share of the water in the stream; (b) an order declaring that the defendant has used more than a reasonable share, and directing him to return to the stream water diverted therefrom after user by him; (c) an interdict restraining the defendant from using more than a reasonable share of the water; (d) the sum of £500 as damages.

The defendant, in his plea, admits that he built two weirs in the Brak River, but says that only one is used for diverting his share of the ordinary flow of the water. He also admits that during the period mentioned by the plaintiff he has continued increasingly to divert water from the river, but such increased diversion has been in respect only of surplus flood water after good rains, and the water so diverted on to Varkenskop could not, owing to the quantity of the flood water and the lie of the country, have been utilised by lower proprietors and it would have been waste water but for the defendant's user. The defendant also says that he is almost entirely dependent on flood water to irrigate his crops. He states that the plaintiff so far from being injured has been benefited by his manner of using the water, because after the water is used by him it flows on to the plaintiff's lands, and the plaintiff is thereby enabled to cultivate large tracts of land which otherwise he could not have cultivated, and the springs of plaintiff's lands have been greatly strengthened by the said diversion and use. As to the windmill, the defendant says he only uses it to obtain water for his stock. He denies that he makes or claims to make an unreasonable use of the water, and that he has been using and diverting water (whether flood water or otherwise) to the extent to which he is in law entitled so to do. He can flood the tracts of dry land referred to in the declaration at times only when the river is in such flood that there is far more water in the river than can be used by the lower proprietors. He attributes the damage complained of by the plaintiff to continuous dry season, during which he himself suffered severely, and he denies that the defendant has suffered any damage for which he is in law liable. With respect to the more important facts in this case, there is no conflict of evidence, and it is only when we come to matters of inference, conjecture, and opinion that important differences arise. The parties to the case are men of the utmost integrity, upon whose word upon questions of fact the fullest reliance can be placed, and it will be seen that, in respect of such matters as were treated occasionally during the trial, as touching upon the veracity of the witnesses, there merely existed divergence of views held by men who were advocates of opposing interests and opinions in the subject—agriculture and irrigation. The main outstanding fact admitted on all hands, and established by the evidence, is as to the nature of the stream with regard to the use of which the legal issues are raised between the parties. The stream is question is a perennial stream of the kind so common in the country. It might puzzle those who have had no experience of our rivers to detect the perennial character of streams in channels which for so large a part of their course present the appearance of dry, sandy watercourses. The defendant himself succeeded in an action between him and an upper proprietor to have this river declared by judicial decision to be a perennial stream, and I can find nothing in the evidence to throw doubt upon his own admission that such is the nature of the river. It appears that the Brak River is a river of some magnitude, and rises in the mountains a considerable distance above the farms of the parties to this suit, and possesses a channel, the bed of which is a deep, sandy bottom. This loose sand lies between well-defined banks to such depth that the current of water is not strong enough throughout the course of the river to fill the channel up to the surface of the ground, and to produce a continuous surface flow visible to the eye. The water sinks into the sand, and only rising up where it meets some solid obstruction in its course, and then it becomes available for use by the riparian owners. The invisible underground constant flow of water between well-marked banks in a defined channel has been held to be of such a character as to constitute a perennial stream. I am not prepared to say that such rivers may not reach a tract of country, the bottom of which may be of such a nature as to destroy the character of the river, through the irretrievable loss of the water in the soil, and that, in consequence, a channel or watercourse may be a perennial stream in one part of its course and a dry river bed further down. But it would be impossible to distinguish in this case between the nature of the Brak River on the defendant's farm and that on the farm of the plaintiff. It may be thought that the perennial character of the river being admitted, these remarks are superfluous, but they will be found pertinent when the main issue in the case comes under consideration. Especially as it appeared at times as if the defendant repented of the admission he had made, and called in question the correctness of that admission. It is, however, now established by admission, and evidence that the Brak River in its passage through the farms of the plaintiff and defendant is a perennial stream, and that a perennial stream flows in the channel between its banks, whether visible or not. On the farms Varkenskap, Culmstock, and Temple Farm, the water shows itself at intervals where it is forced up by intervening dykes, in quantities sufficient for common use. This natural emergence of the water is partial in its character, and favours the different farms in varying degrees. Because of the lay of the country and the nature of the river bed, Temple Farm possesses greater natural advantages than the other two farms, and on the whole Culmstock seems to be more favoured than Varkenskap. The nature of the channel and river bed is such that in places it is possible to lead out the water on to the neighbouring soil by means of trifling structures, in others it is necessary to construct some substantial works to raise the bed by means of the silt brought down, and by that means to carry the water out of the channel. The necessary structures have been made, and whatever their effect may be on the flow of the water, no complaint has been raised by the parties on that score so far as the use of the more permanent flow of water is concerned. Although the question is not pointedly raised upon the pleadings by the plaintiff, it is undoubtedly the case that the dispute between the parties turns upon the use of the water periodically brought down by freshets during the rainy season, and if it were not for that the case would not have come into court. The issues are somewhat extended by the introduction of the action of the windmill erected by the defendant by means of which he pumps water into two dams for the use of his cattle. It is clear that the moderate and reasonable use of the water for that purpose would not have been objected to, and it is only when taken in conjunction with the other use of the water by the defendant, that the plaintiff complains that such use becomes unreasonable. It is true that in this connection evidence was elicited to prove that the water raised by means of the pump was allowed to flow over the surrounding land, and the plaintiff felt that this was done of set purpose, and was not merely the result of negligence or accident. A good deal was made of this in the evidence, and it may be well to clear the ground by disposing of this point before considering the more important issues. As I have said, I have no reason to doubt the veracity of the defendant, and I accept his statement that his sole purpose in erecting the windmill and constructing the dams was to place a reasonable quantity of water into a reservoir, where his cattle could drink. That some water may have escaped and run over the neighbouring ground, as deposed to by some of the witnesses, is quite possible; but I am of opinion, upon the whole of the evidence, that it has not been proved that an unreasonable use was made of the water raised by the pump. If an unreasonable use should hereafter be made by the defendant in this manner, the plaintiff will have his remedy. However, I do not believe anything would have been heard of this complaint, if it were not for the conduct of the defendant in other respects. The plaintiff feeling, as he says, that he was not fairly dealt with by the defendant, became apprehensive, when he saw the windmill being put up, that the defendant was meditating further inroads upon his rights; but, in my opinion, his suspicions are not justified by the facts, or at least not supported by the evidence. There is not sufficient proof in this case that in taking the water for his cattle, the defendant made an unreasonable use of it. This primary lawful user cannot be objected to, because it happens to go in company with other alleged unreasonable users. We come now to the central dispute between the parties. It appears that the Brak River is subject during the year to freshets or floods from its upper reaches. These are heavier in character and more frequent in occurrence according as the rains are more or less plentiful. Their duration also depends upon the character of the rainfall. After thunderstorms they rapidly run off, after long-continued rain the flow is more prolonged. And as the rains fall over a larger surface, the surface water takes longer to run off. It will be found necessary—for the purpose of the contentions raised—to distinguish carefully between surface water after rains, which constitutes the freshets, properly so called, and the subsequent percolations through the soil, which, after soaking down-pours, find their way into the channel, and which belong rather to the permanent flow of the stream. It is not disputed that a long continued current of water by which the usual flow of the river is increased after steady rains, is such as is subject to the rules of common use by the riparian owners. As to the freshets, they vary in volume; at times they are so small that they can be wholly diverted by weirs placed in the river by some of the riparian owners; at others they suffice to feed the furrows of all the proprietors, and then again they are so violent and impetuous that most of the water rushes down the course of the river to the sea. With respect to the last, no question of reasonable use has arisen in this case. It is as to the two former that questions both of law and fact are raised. The question of law is whether the ordinary rules applicable to the common and reasonable user of the water of a perennial stream apply to them, and the question of fact is whether the defendant has made an unreasonable use of these freshet waters. It must be ascertained what it is that the defendant has actually done. He has placed three substantial weirs in the river for the purpose of diverting the water. The existence of the upper weir is immaterial to the case, it being only used to feed the second weir. Weir No. 2 is intended to divert the usual flow of water, and also to turn out such flood water as it is capable of doing. It is so constructed that it diverts all the water through a furrow on the west bank of the river, until the water comes down in such volume that it flows over the crest of the Weir, and when that happens a portion of the water flows over a beam lying across a furrow on the east side, and so down that furrow on to the land of the defendant on that side. If this beam were lifted the water would rush out in the furrows both on the west and east side, and in that case a strong freshet will be needed to take the water over the crest of the weir. When the water does rush over weir No. 2 it is intercepted by weir No. 3. This latter weir is used solely for the diversion of flood water, for there is no perceptible permanent surface flow between weirs No. 2 and No. 3. A furrow carries away the water on the west out of weir No. 3, and is used to irrigate the vleys and land of the defendant, other than cultivated fields. Weir No. 3 would take all the flood water out of the river, unless the freshet were so strong as to pass over the crest of the weir. It follows, therefore, that, even when the beam is down at weir No. 2, a considerable quantity of water coming down in a freshet will be diverted by the defendant's weirs. In this way very small flows will be diverted, which might be of little avail to the lower proprietors. But most undoubtedly the weirs are capable of turning off, and have been used to turn off a large volume of water, which would be sufficient for common use. I shall refer later to the dispute respecting the lifting of the beams, confining my attention for the present to the quantity of water taken by the farmers on the west, and the overflow over the beam. As a matter of fact, the defendant claims the right to take as much of the flood water as he pleases, and denies the existence of any right in the lower proprietors to confine him to a reasonable user thereof. His claim as set forth in his plea is not as large as that. In his plea he states that he admits that in the period mentioned in the declaration he has continued increasingly to divert on to Varkenskop water from the river, but he says such increased diversion has been in respect only of surplus flood water after good rains, and the water so diverted could not, owing to the quantity of the flood water and the lie of the country, have been utilised by the lower proprietors, and would have been waste water but for defendant's user. The reference to good rains seems to imply that he only uses the water when there is abundance of it, and consequently enough for all. But then it is difficult to see why, owing to the quantity, it could not be used by the lower proprietor. If it could be used by defendant, it could surely be used by others, whatever its quantity. If the explanation is sought for in these words, that owing to the lie of the country it could not be served by the lower proprietors, then the contention is disposed of by the evidence, because it is quite clear that both Culmstock and Temple Farm are adapted to the use of flood water. The pleader was not prepared to assert boldly the rights claimed by the defendant himself, but alleges certain special circumstances, under which he uses the water without injury to the plaintiff. Finally it comes to this, that the Court has to decide whether freshets or flood-water, whether large or small in volume, must be treated as part of the perennial stream of the Brak River, and subject to all the rules applicable to perennial streams. There is very little direct authority deciding in express terms the definite issue here raised.

Indirectly, the point has been referred to in considering the law of water rights for other purposes. Much argument has been addressed to the principles of the decisions of our Courts on the subject of perennial streams, mainly, I take it, to discover in how far they throw any direct light upon the point in question, and indeed by that means we may be enabled to develop the doctrine bearing upon the nature of flood-water. But I do not think I am called upon to discuss at any length the cases which have firmly established the basis upon which the user of water of a perennial stream should be regulated. The Roman law has been referred to as showing how laws were enacted by means of the Pretor's edict, wherein strict and well-defined rules were laid down respecting the use of water, but it is evident that the Pretor himself—through the instrumentality of his equitable actions—allowed an extension of the established principles to analogous cases. In England and America, where the rules of the civil law in this respect have been adapted, we find the law developed and adapted to the needs of the country. Our Courts have done the same in dealing with the peculiar features, requirements, and circumstances of our country regarding the flow of water. It is quite true that flood water has at times been designated as a common enemy, and described as a wild beast, but such wide statements cannot be taken literally, because it is evident that flood-water can be tamed and made to render good service. And it is only necessary to refer to the good work it has already done, as shown by the witnesses in this case, to prove that it is a thing of great utility. Our thirsty land differs largely from countries possessing abundance of water, which becomes excessive the moment the rainy season begins. But it is contended that notwithstanding the fact that flood-water can be utilised, it is in its nature such that it is not amenable to the rules necessary for its common beneficial enjoyment. If it were quite true that it is wholly impossible to make arrangement for its reasonable division among riparian owners, that would be a good reason for the Court refusing to interfere by attempting to do the impossible, and thereby deprive one man of a benefit without any advantage to others. But if it be found upon reference to the legal authorities as a whole, that flood water must be regarded as part of the perennial stream in which it flows, then it follows that it becomes subject to the common interest of all the riparian owners, and any one derogating from their rights has the burden of proof thrown upon him that what he takes cannot be beneficially enjoyed by others. This the defendant has, in my opinion, failed to show, and there is evidence that some of the witnesses who raised difficulties have themselves considered and suggested plans for the common enjoyment of flood water. Counsel for the defendant contended that only the usual average flow of the water in the channel should be regarded as the perennial stream, and anything over and above that produced by a surface flow after rain is to be taken as flood water, exempt from the rules applicable to perennial streams. If surface water which goes to swell a stream after rain is to be taken as distinguishable and distinct from the perennial stream, it is difficult to see why percolation through the soil after rain should not be treated in the same way. But not the remotest suggestion was made or could be made that percolations through the soil finding their way into the channel could be treated otherwise than as part of the stream. And yet surface water running in no defined channel and percolations in the soil fall under similar legal rules, and while on land or in the soil are at the free disposal of the owner of the land. I can see no reason why the one should be identified with the stream when it finds its way into the channel and the other not. In considering this case it must be borne in mind that the defendant claims, not the surface water after rain which has fallen on his own land, but flood water which is already part of the stream when it enters his farm. There is no question here as to water which falls on his own ground. To elucidate the matter, I may take a passage from a judgment of Lord Cranworth in Claremore v. Richards (7 House of Lords, 379), based on the same principles as our law, and embracing several features appearing also in the present case. The passage is as follows: "The right to running water has always been properly described as a natural right, just like the right to the air we breathe. They are gifts of Nature, and no one has a right to appropriate them. There is no difficulty in enforcing that right, because running water is something visible, and no one can interrupt it without knowing whether he does or does not do injury to those who are above or below him, but if the doctrine were applied to water merely percolating, as it is said, through the soil and eventually reaching some stream, it would always be matter that would require the evidence of scientific men to state whether or not there has been interruption, and whether or not there had been injury. It is a process of Nature not apparent, and therefore such percolating water has not received the protection which water running in a natural channel on the surface has always received." The remarks will be applicable to that portion of this case which deals with the evidence given to prove that the springs in the river have been strengthened by percolation, but here I shall only point out the distinction drawn between water while percolating through the soil, and the same water when it has eventually reached a perennial stream. And also that the law will not attempt to do what it is impossible to do. In this case, it would be impossible to decide in the case of streams which constantly vary in volume what portion of the stream is at any particular time attributable to surface flood water, or to percolations after rain, or to the usual but varying flow of the river. The stream when increased after rain is one entire thing, which cannot be analysed or separated into its component parts, and all the law can do is to treat it as a whole, possessing all the characteristics of the perennial flow, and subject to the same rules. I shall now refer to some passages in the authorities which have a more direct bearing on the point in issue. Lord Chelmsford said in Claremore v. Richards, when dealing with the difficulties attending percolating water: "There is no difficulty in determining the rights of the different proprietors to the usufruct of the water in a running stream; whether it has been increased by floods or diminished by drought, it flows on in the same ascertained course, and the use which every owner may claim is only of the water which has entered into and become part of the stream." In Broadbent v. Ramsbottom (11 Exch., 615), Alderson, B., said: "All the water falling from heaven and shed upon the surface of a hill, at the foot of which a brook runs, must, by the natural force of gravity, find its way to the bottom, and so into the brook; but it does not prevent the owner of the land on which the water falls to deal with it as he may please, and appropriate it. He cannot, it is true, do so if the water has arrived at and is flowing in some natural channel already formed, but he has a perfect right to appropriate it before it arrives at such channel." In the Encyclopædia of the Law of Scotland, a passage, treating of non-navigable rivers, appears, which, after stating that the permanent diversion of water to the prejudice of a lower proprietor is not allowed, proceeds to say: "And this applies equally, although the diversion extends, and can extend, only to what is in excess of the usual flow of the stream." Further on, it reads: "If a heritor introduces a quantity of alien water into a stream, this will not entitle him to withdraw a quantity of river water equal in amount to that so introduced." The plain inference from all these authorities is that, whatever water finds its way into a perennial stream, becomes part and parcel of that stream. Chief Justice Kotze, in the High Court of the Transvaal, when dealing with a case under similar circumstances, was of opinion that the proprietor of a farm was entitled to catch up the rain-water falling on his land, and deal with it as his own, but held that this right cannot be extended to rain-water which has found its way into the channel of a public stream. Although this conclusion could be readily deduced from the Roman law, where the floods of winter as well as the moderate flow of summer are regarded as forming the perennial stream, it is very satisfactory to find that judges of high authority have come to the same conclusion. I am, therefore, of opinion that water flowing in the channel of a river, between its banks, whether it is the moderate and usual stream, or the waters increased by freshets, or the more considerable floods after heavy rains, is part of the perennial stream, and subject to all the rules regulating the reasonable user of such water by the riparian owners. That being so, it is not difficult to determine upon the evidence that the quantity of water diverted by the defendant by means of his two weirs is very considerable, and constitutes an unreasonable user of the water. But then it is said even though a large quantity is taken out of the river by the defendant, a fair proportion of it is restored to the river by means of abundant percolations through the soil of the defendant's farm, which go to strengthen the springs used by the plaintiff. The burden of proof after disturbing the natural flow of the stream lies upon the defendant. It is for him to show that he has not deprived the lower proprietors of their reasonable use of the water of the river. We have had the evidence of witnesses who are intimately acquainted with the locality, and they differ widely as to the effect of the flooding of the fields by the springs in the river. Then we have had the evidence of experienced farmers, who speak of the probable or general effect of such flooding. As to the latter, I may say that their theories are such as any intelligent man can form an opinion upon, and their experience must necessarily be confined to the nature of the localities they have lived in. It is quite true that extensive flooding in narrow valleys must have the effect of creating steady and plentiful percolations back into the river. Where the valleys are wider, the beneficial effect on the river will be less, and where the water is taken to a distance on to extensive flats very little will find its way by means of percolation back into the stream. There is no satisfactory clear proof in this case that by the flooding of his own lands the defendant has strengthened the springs of the plaintiff. And in my opinion this is not a case in which the nature of the ground is such that the waters led by the defendant on to his lands must naturally and necessarily find their way back into the river to be available for Culmstock or Temple Farm. Moreover,

I am of opinion that when the authorities allow a reasonable use of the water of a stream to an upper proprietor, provided he allows the water, reduced reasonably by such use, to flow back into the stream, it is not intended that this should be by means of uncertain percolation, but rather by means of a visible flow. It has already been said that the percolations through the soil belong to the owner of the land, and when a man turns a running stream into invisible percolations, he destroys its proper character. And the very difficulty is created which is pointed out by Lord Cranworth in the case of Claremore v. Richards, when he says: "But if the doctrine is applied to water merely percolating, as it is said, and eventually reaching some stream, it would always be a matter that would require the evidence of scientific men to state whether or not there had been injury." In my opinion, it is not permissible to an upper proprietor to divert the water, and to tell the lower proprietor that he gets his reasonable share by means of percolation. And then again it is clearly established that the water must be returned to the river before it enters the land of the lower riparian owner, which was not done in this case. I am consequently of opinion that the defendant made an unreasonable use of the water, irrespective of the question whether he raised the beam on the east side of the river, but as a great deal of the evidence was directed to that point, I think the parties are entitled to a finding upon the facts bearing upon it. And I may say, if the case depended upon the question whether the beam was lifted to allow an escape of the water to the east, I should have given absolution from the instance. The Court is expected to infer that the water flows on to Grasbult flowed through the east furrow, when no witness ever saw that it actually did; while, on the other hand, the Court is expected to find that the water came from the Brak catchment, when no witness for the defence could say positively that that was the case, except on one or two occasions. Men of intelligence, experience, and local knowledge have said a prolonged flow can be produced by a rainfall on the Brak, and this Court cannot by a mere doctrinaire opinion of its own brush aside this evidence. The question is left open, and with it the question respecting the use of water on after-acquired non-riparian land by a riparian owner. The facts not having been established as to unreasonable user of Brak River water on Grasbult, it is unnecessary to apply the law, especially as no authorities have been cited which throw any light upon this part of the case. Having decided that the defendant made an unreasonable use of the water of the Brak River by means of the western furrows out of weirs No. 2 and No. 3, to the injury of the plaintiff, the question arises, what damages were caused thereby? No strenuous effort was made to prove the actual amount of damages, and it was apparent that this was because the plaintiff was not eager to obtain any damage, his object being rather to have his legal rights settled. But the plaintiff, having necessarily suffered some damages, the Court will fix it at the nominal amount of £20. Before concluding, I should like to make some remarks upon a subject which has a strong bearing upon the case, and might even have been pertinent to its legal aspect. It is said that flood water is so unmanageable that it ought rather to be treated like a wild animal, that is to be feared rather than enticed. But it is clear that this wild animal has been tamed, and put to use by the defendant. Then, again, it is contended it is of such a nature that it will not allow of reasonable division. I am quite satisfied that any minute or measured division would be difficult, but that some rough and ready arrangement giving the different owners an approximately equal enjoyment of the water cannot be made, I cannot believe. It is said any such arrangement would be expensive. That is not unlikely, but the benefits expected to be reaped are large. Anyhow, the Court can only find that the plaintiff in this case is entitled to a reasonable share of the perennial stream called the Brak River, whether the water in the stream is the ordinary flow or the result of freshets large or small, and that the defendant, having deprived him of his reasonable use of the water, has caused damage in the sum of £20. Judgment will be given for the plaintiff for £20, with costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

ADMISSION. { 1905.
Nov. 7th.

Mr. Sutton moved, as a matter of urgency, for the admission of Johan Godfried Taute as an attorney, notary, and conveyancer. The urgency, counsel said, was that applicant wished to proceed up-country this (Tuesday) evening.

Application granted, and oaths administered.

SMORENBERG V. SMORENBERG.

This was an action brought by Johannes Hendrick Smorenberg, of the Paarl, against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, on the ground of her unlawful and malicious desertion, failing which a decree of divorce. Mr. Lewis was for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

The declaration alleged that defendant had declined to return to and cohabit with plaintiff, who claimed a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, failing which a decree of divorce, with forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage and custody at once of the two elder children, and the two younger children on attaining a maturer age.

Johannes Hendrick Smorenberg (the plaintiff) said that he was married to the defendant at Parys, O.R.C., in 1892. He settled at Paarl about three or four years ago. About twelve months ago he went to Heilbron, O.R.C. He wrote to his wife to come to him, but she refused. Subsequently he returned to Paarl, and found that his wife had gone away from his home. He had since written to his wife, asking her to return to him, but she would not. They both lived at the Paarl.

By the Court: His wife was living with another man. He could not prove whether she was living with this other man as his wife. There were four children of the marriage. He desired to have custody of the elder children. Witness had formerly been a schoolmaster, and was now employed as a mattress-maker. He wanted custody of the younger children when they became old enough to leave their mother.

Witness (in further evidence) said that neither he nor his wife had any property.

By the Court: The other man used to be with a firm of architects, but he was at present out of work. He used to be a boarder at witness's house. Only four days ago his wife said that she would not return to him.

Decree of restitution granted, defendant to return to or receive the plaintiff on or before the 30th November, failing which to show cause on the 12th December why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed, with immediate custody of the two elder children, and also of the two younger children on attaining the age of seven years respectively, or such earlier date as he may, on due application to the Court and notice to the defendant, be entitled to by order of the Court.

Postea (December 13): Rule made absolute.

CHRISTIAN V. CHRISTIAN.

This was an action brought by Christina Mary Christian, of Albert-road, Salt River, against her husband, Joseph Wm. Christian, of Elsie's River Halt, for divorce on the ground of his adultery with one Lydia Fortuin. Mr. Douglas Buchanan appeared for plaintiff; defendant appeared in person.

Mr. Buchanan submitted that defendant could not be heard, inasmuch as he had been duly barred from pleading.

Defendant (in reply to his lordship) said that he wished to enter appearance.

[Hopley, J.: How many witnesses have you got?]

Defendant: I have several, but the chief witness in the case is dead.

[Hopley, J.: I am afraid, then, that we cannot have his evidence. You know, you ought not to be heard at all now, because you took no notice of the summons.]

The declaration alleged that in May, 1903, defendant deserted plaintiff, and had since contributed nothing towards the maintenance or support of the child of the marriage or plaintiff. Plaintiff claimed a decree of divorce, with forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage, and an order for payment of £3 a month as and for maintenance of the said child.

Christina Mary Christian (the plaintiff) said that she was married at St. Paul's Church, Cape Town, in July, 1902. They lived together at her mother's until the 3rd May, 1903, when he deserted her. She continued to live with her mother until August of the same year, when she went to work again as a domestic servant. Witness saw defendant when she took out the summons, and he then admitted to her that he was living with Lydia Fortuin. Witness had been appointed sole heiress under her father's will. The estate consisted of land, and a house erected upon it.

By the Court: Witness received information of the fact that defendant was living with Lydia Fortuin from his sister.

Defendant said that he admitted the adultery, but he wanted to know whether it was right that a woman should drive a man into a thing of this kind and then bring him into court?

[Hopley, J.: You might be driven from home, but I don't see how you could be driven to commit adultery.]

Defendant rejoined that he was a poor orphan, and he should have somebody to support him. He meant that he wanted to work, and to have somebody to look after him.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage registers, gave evidence as to the registration of the marriage.

Elizabeth Paulson (sister of the defendant) said that she knew her brother and Lydia Fortuin were living together as man and wife.

Plaintiff (recalled) said that she did not press for an order for maintenance of the child.

Decree of divorce granted, with costs, with forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage in community, and custody of the child.

NILSEN V. NILSEN.

This was an action brought by Olaf Cornelis Nilsen, fisherman, Port Beaufort, district of Swellendam, against his wife, who was stated to be living at the Touw's River Location, district of Worcester, for divorce, on the ground of her adultery with one Carel Dourie. Dr. Greer appeared for plaintiff; defendant did not appear.

The declaration alleged that the parties were married in community at Kalk Bay in 1897, and that there was issue of the marriage one child. Defendant, it was alleged, had been living at the Touw's River Location in adultery with one Carel Dourie. Plaintiff claimed a dissolution of the bonds of marriage, with forfeiture of the benefits, and custody of the minor child.

Mr. Buchanan read a letter from defendant, in which she accused plaintiff of having been addicted to drink, and of having cruelly treated her while under the influence of drink. She also stated that she had three children, of which plaintiff was the father.

Wm. Thomas Birch, clerk in charge of the marriage register, gave evidence as to registration of the marriage.

Olaf Cornelis Nilsen (plaintiff) said that he was a Norwegian. He was married to defendant at the English Church, Kalk Bay, in 1897. They lived together at Kalk Bay until October, 1902, when witness went to Port Beaufort and his wife went to Touw's River.

By the Court: He used to drink a little, but he had not treated his wife cruelly. She had never complained that he had treated her badly. His wife went to Touw's River for a holiday, her father residing there.

Witness (continuing) said that in November, 1902, he sent her £4 to come to Port Beaufort and join him. She promised to come to Fort Beaufort after Christmas, and he subsequently wrote to her asking her to come, but she had not answered the letter, and had not returned to him. Witness was willing to take charge of the three children. He did not press for costs of the proceedings. He was making about £1 10s. a week.

Ernest Johannes du Toit said that he had seen defendant at Touw's River. She had lived with Carel Dourie as his wife until about three months ago. Defendant now lived alone, and supported herself by washing.

Hopley, J., said that in the declaration plaintiff said there was only one child of the marriage, and he now admitted that there were three.

Dr. Greer applied for a formal amendment of the declaration in accordance with the admissions of the plaintiff.

[Hopley J.: In view of the letter of the defendant, I do not see that any harm could be done by making the amendment, and the declaration will be amended accordingly.]

Defendant, in answer to the Court, said that he proposed to put the children in a home when they came into his custody, but he was not quite prepared to receive them at present.

Hopley, J., said that a decree of divorce would be granted as prayed, and plaintiff would be given custody of the three children, in accordance with the request of defendant herself. He thought it was clear that if plaintiff took any of the children he must take them all, otherwise he would have to pay something to defendant for their maintenance, say, 10s. per month for each child.

Plaintiff said that he could not afford to pay 30s. a month.

Hopley, J., said that if the children remained with their mother and plaintiff did not make satisfactory arrangements with her with regard to their maintenance, she would have leave to apply to the Court for an order against plaintiff to pay so much per month.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

DAVIS V. McDONALD. { 1905.
{ Nov. 8th.

Employer and employee—Monthly notice.

D. had contracted to serve M. for a certain monthly salary, the engagement to be terminable on a month's notice on either side. D. asserted that it was understood between himself and one B. that the notice must expire on the last day of the month. M. had given D. notice on the 9th December, 1904, and tendered plaintiff's salary to January 9th, 1905. B. was not called for the defence, and it was admitted that D. was in the habit of rendering his accounts at the end of each month. D. now claimed salary for the entire month of January.

Held, that judgment must be given for D., with costs.

This was an action brought by De Leon Davis, mechanical engineer, residing in Cape Town, against Charles Arthur MacDonald, manufacturer of refrigerating machinery, to recover £51 11s., alleged to be due by way of salary.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that in October, 1903, he was engaged at a salary of £25 15s. 6d. and expenses, from month to month, and subject to one month's notice, the salary to be payable at the end of each month. Plaintiff was subsequently engaged to superintend the Cape Town office of the defendant. Plaintiff duly fulfilled his part of the agreement, and the said employment was continued from month to month, until December 9, 1904, when the defendant, through his duly authorised agent, gave the plaintiff a month's notice to complete the said agreement. Plaintiff contended that the legal effect of the said agreement was that it should terminate on January 31, 1905. Plaintiff continued in the employment of the said MacDonald until January 9, 1905, and said that he was ready and willing to remain in the defendant's employment until January 31. He claimed payment of his salary for the months of December and January, viz., £51 11s.

Defendant, in his plea, said that under the agreement he was entitled to terminate the engagement of the plaintiff at 30 days' notice, reckoned from the date of giving such notice, and that the plaintiff was given and received 30 days' notice on December 9, 1904. Defendant had tendered to plaintiff the sum of £33 10s. 9d., being the salary to which he was entitled to January 9, 1905. Defendant said further that it was plaintiff's duty to supply lists of his expenses, supported by proper vouchers, and that plaintiff had failed to supply vouchers. Plaintiff had falsely and fraudulently claimed for amounts largely in excess of his board and lodging, and had been paid £91 16s. 9d. more than he was entitled to. In reconvention defendant claimed £58 6s., being the difference between the sum of £33 10s. 9d., to which he admitted that plaintiff was entitled for salary to January 9, and the sum of £91 16s. 9d., excess of charges made by the plaintiff for board and lodging.

Plaintiff, in his replication, said that defendant never requested him to render vouchers for his expenses, and that the claims for expenses were duly submitted to and paid by defendant. As a plea to the claim in reconvention, he denied the allegations of fraud and false pretences, and prayed that the defendant's claim be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers (with him Mr. Russell) was for plaintiff; Mr. W. Porter Buchanan (with him Mr. M. Bissett) was for defendant.

D. Leon Davis (plaintiff) said that he was a mechanical operating and supervising engineer. The defendant was a manufacturer of refrigerating machinery, and carried out contracts all over the world. Witness was engaged by defendant in May, 1902, to superintend the erection of certain refrigerating machinery in this colony, and entered into an agreement for one year at a salary of 1,500 dollars, and expenses. Witness first went to Port Elizabeth, and afterwards he was in Cape Town. He then went to Somerset West, and was employed on behalf of the respondent at De Beers Explosive Works. In regard to expenses, the defendant firm sometimes made inquiries, but the ordinary course of business was for him to make a report, and that report would be accepted by his employers, who would then render him a statement showing what was due to him, and make payment. No objection was raised to his charge for hotel expenses. The only item to which exception was taken was a subscription of £5 which he gave towards the entertainment of the officers and crews of the American Fleet, on the occasion of the visit to the Cape. Witness subscribed the money as coming from his office, but the firm declined to pay, and charged it back to him.

[Hopley, J.: They did not think it was an item you ought to commit the firm to at all?]

Yes, sir; they charged it back to me. Witness gave evidence as to the custom adopted by the defendant firm in regard to his expenses while engaged at Somerset West. Witness stayed on the property by an arrangement that he should come to town once a week, and be allowed expenses. His wife was at that time staying at Weston House, Sea Point. He spoke to the arrangement which obtained when he removed to Mr. Abegglen's hotel at Somerset Strand. He stayed with his wife at Mr. Abegglen's, and paid £13 or £13 10s. a month, having been unable to continue at the culinary department at De Beers Works on account of the food. The charge for himself alone, Mr. Abegglen told him, would have been £7 15s. a month. Witness had frequently to come to town in connection with the electrical machinery. In September or October, 1903, having completed his work at Somerset West, he came to town, and entered into a further contract with Mr. Beveridge, acting on behalf of the defendant, who had other large machinery to erect for the Imperial Cold Storage, and the Cape Cold Storage. The firm were using every endeavour to induce him to stay, and to give up the notion of going back to America. Witness said: "I have made up my mind to conclude arrangements for another class of business of my own, and I won't make any contract with you definitely, but I will enter into an agreement with you month by month." The engagement was to be terminable upon one month's notice on either side, and ran from the first of each month. He was to receive £25 15s. 6d. and expenses, a special arrangement being made as he desired to take a house, so that his wife could do the cooking. Witness was suffering from indigestion. He took a furnished house at Green Point, and the firm agreed to pay half of his housekeeping expenses. He continued housekeeping until April, 1904, but he found the expenses to be very large, and as his general health did not seem to improve very much under his wife's cooking, and catering to his wants of appetite, he decided to give up the house. He afterwards went to a boarding-house, where he was accompanied by Mrs. Davies. The proprietor told him that the charge to him alone would have been eleven guineas. It was specially understood in the negotiations between Mr. Beveridge and himself that the notice should not break into a month, but that notice should terminate on the last day of the month. On the 9th December last he saw Mr. Davidson, a representative of the defendant firm, who told him that they were thinking of shutting down the Cape Town office. It was common in America in business matters to use the term "30 days." He did not think, however, that he used that term, because his intention had been to have all his arrangements running to the end of the month. On the 14th December he was sent by the firm to Kimberley, and he returned to Cape Town on the 7th January.

In cross-examination the witness admitted that he had whilst in defendant's employment looked after machinery for the Verster Cold Storage, but with the defendant's permission. He had ordered a boiler from a rival house, when it was found that defendant's did not suit. Witness did not hold himself out as consulting engineer to the Federal Cold Storage, although he was addressed as such.

Mr. Buchanan: Did you refute it?

Witness: No.

Witness was further cross-examined with regard to outside work he had done.

[Hopley, J. (to Mr. Buchanan): What do you wish to prove?—That he has been doing underhand work?]

Work that we knew nothing of.

In further cross-examination witness said he was surprised to hear that defendant had been selling boilers like the one supplied to the Federal Cold Storage for a period of seven years. Witness denied that he had made commission or anything else for supplying machinery to the Federal Cold Storage for outside firms. Witness had received a fee from Mr. Verster for advice given.

By the Court: Witness was endeavouring to further the interests of his firm in advising the Federal Cold Storage.

Witness (further cross-examined) denied that the defendant's firm had to pay his wife's travelling expenses.

Mr. Buchanan: You apparently have a large scope for your expenses. I see you charge for hotels, theatres, cars, wines, etc.

Witness said he never had to present vouchers for expenses until the present case came on. He gave vouchers when he had them.

Hopley, J., said he considered that it was unnecessary to re-open the accounts which had been paid. Counsel would have to come almost to dishonesty and fraud before the Court would reopen these accounts. If the firm had just discovered the matter, the Court might listen to it, but they had got into trouble with him over a small amount, and they now wanted to re-open his accounts for the past three years, all of which had been paid, and should have been inquired into.

Mr. Buchanan contended that he was justified in reopening the matter, if he could prove that his clients had been charged more than they should have paid.

[Hopley, J.: You are trying to prove that he is absolutely and fraudulently charging items that he never spent?]

They are outside his own actual expenses.

[Hopley, J.: He has actually expended these amounts, and you have to prove that he did not do it on behalf of your firm.]

He has expended money on Mrs. Davis, which we should not be asked to pay.

The witness denied having charged the firm for Mrs. Davis's maintenance.

[Hopley, J.: If a man wishes for the company of his wife, he is entitled to it.]

But he has gone in for larger and better rooms because of the presence of his wife.

[Hopley, J.: But he does not charge for her.]

He has also had fires in his room.

Witness: I never charged MacDonald for coal or oil, although I should have done so.

By the Court: Any excess in the amount allowed was incurred on behalf of the firm.

Mr. Buchanan (to witness): I put it to you that you often went out for your own pleasure, and charged the company, especially so when you were stopping at Somerset West?

Witness: I am not so fond of sitting in the train for three hours at a time, and rising before daybreak to catch trains, especially in the winter time.

Mr. De Villiers closed his case.

Alexander Davidson, manager of the defendant's business in South Africa, said that when he spoke to plaintiff in December, 1904, about giving up the Cape Town branch, the latter said that he would want 30 days' notice. To this witness agreed. Plaintiff did not say that he had agreed with Mr. Beveridge that he was to have a complete calendar month's notice. Witness saw plaintiff on the 10th January, and tendered to him his salary, but this plaintiff refused to accept, and said that he must have 30 days' notice from the first day of the month. Witness went on Mr. Davis's own words on the 9th December that he was to have 30 days' notice.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: Witness knew nothing whatever as to what passed between plaintiff and Mr. Beveridge. Plaintiff said that he would want 30 days' notice, and witness gave him notice accordingly. If plaintiff had said that he would require a month's notice, witness would have understood that the notice should commence on the 1st of the month. Mr. Beveridge was in Durban in January, but in February he had gone away.

Mr. Bisset read the evidence of the defendant, taken on commission. Mr. Macdonald spoke to having had an interview with the plaintiff on the 10th January last, when the latter said he wanted 30 days' notice, which was one month.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case.

Counsel having been heard in argument on the question of the notice.

Hopley, J.: The sole matter that remains in dispute between the parties is whether or not the plaintiff is entitled to be paid salary to the end of January, 1905, i.e., £51 11s., for December and January, or whether the amount tendered by the defendant, £33 odd, was a sufficient sum. Other matters have been introduced in the defendant's plea and counter-claim, which they have dropped, I think, wisely, but I must remark with none too good a grace. I think that they would have had exceeding difficulty in making any sort of case to try and upset the accounts which they had passed, and which they had paid out and considered settled for a long series of months. I think it would have been more graceful if, in dropping that counter-claim, they had at once said that they had no grounds for the allegations which they had made, and made apparently without being able to call any witnesses, as they themselves admit, to support them to-day. What I have to decide is the simple matter of what was the contract at the time subsisting between plaintiff and defendant, plaintiff being at that time on a monthly engagement with the defendant at a fixed salary. The point is a simple one, but it does not by any means follow that there is not some difficulty about it in regard to the evidence which is to establish so simple a position. The plaintiff says that he agreed with Mr. Macdonald and his representative, Mr. Beveridge, to remain in the service of the former a little longer on condition that he was not tied down for anything longer than a month. He says that he stipulated, and it was then thoroughly understood, between him and Mr. Beveridge, that a month under that agreement should mean a calendar month, beginning on the first day of the month, and ending on the last day. I am inclined to believe the plaintiff's version of the contract with Mr. Beveridge, and I come to that conclusion for more than one reason. Plaintiff was in the habit of rendering his accounts to the defendant by the calendar month. Then again, he took a furnished house, and any one who knows anything about the matter knows that it is necessary to run such a establishment here from the first to the end of the month. I think that there is an a priori very good ground for supposing that plaintiff said to Beveridge that it should be a month, and that it should be a calendar month running from the first to the last day of the month. There is one way of disproving this, that has not been adopted by the defendant, and that is to call Beveridge to give his version of the agreement. It is not as if the defendant had had no opportunity of doing so, because Beveridge was still in South Africa when this point arose, and was discussed between the parties. As the whole contract was between Beveridge and the plaintiff, it seems absolutely elementary common sense and elementary law, and they must have known that Beveridge was the one person who should have come here with regard to the contract. I cannot help thinking that Mr. Beveridge should have been called in this matter. Judgment will be given for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, £51 11s., with costs of suit.

Mr. De Villiers applied for the expenses of the plaintiff as a necessary witness inasmuch as he had had to come to Cape Town from Johannesburg, where he had been on business.

Mr. Buchanan said that defendant had been thinking of applying for an order for security of costs against plaintiff, as he was an alien.

Hopley, J., allowed plaintiff his personal expenses, and also allowed him costs of an application made in March last.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

HOLMES AND CO. V. FRYER. { 1905.
Nov. 10th.

This was an application for provisional sentence on two promissory notes for £178 13s. 6d. and £31 7s. respectively.

The defendant's affidavit stated that he was a farmer, aged 63 years, and resided at Upington. Until November last he lived in German South-west Africa. During the war two of his sons were shot, and he had lost nearly all his stock. He had always been a hard drinker, but since the loss of his children and stock he had been very much upset. He had been drinking very heavily of late. He used to obtain brandy from Hirschson, but the brandy was not good, and it made him nearly half-mad. He did not remember having signed the notes in question.

The answering affidavit of Herman Hirschson, general dealer, stated that there was a transaction in mules, in which Marengo, the Hottentot leader, had a hand. Deponent went on to say that he had known defendant was in the habit of drinking, but he had never known him unfit to transact business on account of drunkenness. On the day in question defendant was sober, and quite capable of transacting business. The notes were given to deponent's firm for goods sold and delivered, and were endorsed over to W. J. Holmes and Co. for valuable consideration. Affidavits by Joseph Hirschson and others were also read.

Mr. Benjamin for plaintiff; Mr. Burton for defendant.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said it seemed to him that the defendant denied the signature to the notes, and also alleged fraud.

Mr. Burton said that he did not take the point that defendant denied having signed the notes, but what defendant did say was that he had no recollection of the alleged transaction. Defendant's position was that his unfortunate condition was taken advantage of by these traders out in the country. Counsel read further affidavits by defendant and others, the former alleging that since his arrival in the district he had been supplied by the Hirschsons and others with as much bad brandy as he could drink, until his mind had become deranged. Mr. Burton, in argument, urged that this was essentially a case in which plaintiff should show what the consideration was for which the notes had been given by defendant. Was it all "sarsaparilla," the name by which brandy was known among traders dealing in illicit liquor? The Hirschsons were not licensed dealers in liquor, and there was nothing to show that defendant had had anything from them except liquor.

Mr. Benjamin said that the defence was not a denial of the signature, but it was alleged that the notes were obtained from defendant when under the influence of drink, and were not for just consideration. As to the condition of the defendant, counsel submitted that the balance of the testimony was in favour of the contention of the plaintiffs that Fryer, although admittedly a heavy drinker, was sober and fit to transact business. As to the alleged illegal consideration, it was merely suggested in the affidavits put in by the other side that the notes were given for liquor supplied to defendant, but no direct statement to that effect was made. The plaintiffs, he submitted, had taken the notes over from the Hirschsons for valuable consideration, and were entitled to provisional sentence.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that if this had been a case brought by Hirschson, the two grounds which had been alleged by the defendant would have been sufficient to induce him to refuse provisional sentence. Unfortunately, the notes were in the hands of a third person, an innocent holder, and under these circumstances, he (the learned judge) thought that if Fryer believed that he could succeed in an action against the holder, he should go into the principal case. Provisional sentence would be granted, with costs. If the parties went into the principal case, defendant would have an opportunity of recovering costs of the provisional sentence.

At a later stage, His Lordship pointed out to Mr. Burton that he thought it would be very desirable, if the defendant consented, that the case should be tried in the Magistrate's Court, instead of bringing it to Cape Town.

VAN LILL V. HOLM.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence for £14 14s. 6d., on a cheque, together with interest.

Order granted.

STUTTAFORD AND CO. V. MOORE.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest and notice given. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and for the rents accruing from the said property to be attached.

Order granted.

SHAW V. AREND AND SOEKER.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence upon a promissory note for £104.

Order granted.

CLUVER V. CASSIEM.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £240, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

VAN DER MERWE V. DU PLESSIS.

Mr. Sutton moved for provisional sentence upon a mortgage bond for £300, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

STREET V. VAN REENEN.

Mr. P. T. Jones moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

BRUSSELL AND CO. V. KOTZE.

Mr. De Waal moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment. Counsel read an affidavit by defendant, of Calvinia, admitting the debt. He said the debt was incurred before the war. He joined the rebel forces, and his property had been confiscated, with the result that he was without means, and could not discharge the debt. He was now working as a farm labourer, and had a wife and family dependent upon him. He offered to pay 5s. a month in discharge of the debt.

Decree granted, with costs, execution to be suspended upon payment of 5s. a month, leave being reserved to either party to move the Court again.

GUTHRIE AND THERON V. VISAGIE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence upon a mortgage bond for £300, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

ZWARTKOPS VALLEY CO. V. JACOBS. 1905. (Nov. 10th.)

Mr. Wright moved for judgment in terms of consent paper for £40, balance of account.

Order granted.

ESTATE SCHOLTZ V. RADZIWILL.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment, under Rule 319, upon a declaration claiming the sum of £160, being moneys lent, and for an order declaring certain jewellery pledged by the Princess Radziwill with the plaintiff, to be executable in satisfaction of plaintiff's claim. Counsel read an affidavit by Mr. Kayser, attorney, who said that his firm acted on behalf of the plaintiff. He had received an offer from Johannesburg for the purchase of the property in question. He had had the property valued by a jeweller in Cape Town, who valued the diamonds at £75 (5 carats, at £15 each), and the gilt purse and pin, etc., at £5, making a total of £80. The amount for which the property was pledged was £160, and authority was asked to sell it out of hand at the highest price obtainable above £80. Deponent anticipated being able to sell the property at 100 guineas or more, and annexed to his affidavit a memorandum in Princess Radziwill's handwriting, admitting the debt.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Ought not the property to be sold through the Sheriff?]

Mr. Benjamin: That is the usual way, but it is anticipated that if the plaintiff's attorney can sell it out of hand a better price may be realised.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: It may be sold out of hand, but ought it not to be subject to the approval of the Sheriff?]

Mr. Benjamin said he did not see any objection to the adoption of such a course.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: You will no doubt get a better price by selling out of hand, but I think the sale should go through an officer of the court. The Sheriff will have authority to sell out of hand.]

Mr. Benjamin: Of course, it will not be necessary for the Sheriff to advertise it?

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Oh, no. But it had better be a judicial sale, and it should go through the officers of the Court. Judgment will be given as prayed, and the property declared executable, and authority will be given to sell the property to the best advantage, either by public or by private sale.]

Mr. Benjamin: Will that mean that the Sheriff will have to sell by public auction?

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: No; he can sell to the best advantage either way.]

BICCARD V. SMELLEKAMP.

Mr. Bailey moved for judgment under Rule 329d in terms of the summons for transfer of certain land at D'Urban-road, plaintiff tendering costs of transfer.

Order granted.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Bailey moved for the discharge of J. T. P. de Villiers from insolvency. Granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

BEVERN AND CO. V. ROYAL { 1905.
HOTEL CO. } Nov. 10th.

This was an application on notice of motion calling on the respondents to show cause why certain articles of furniture should not be delivered up to the applicants under the terms of an agreement entered into on 7th December, 1904. The furniture was valued at about £2,500. The applicants contended that the terms of the agreement had not been complied with, while the official liquidators of the respondent company set out that they found it against the interests of the creditors to give delivery to the applicants until they established their ownership in court. They had discovered that the rights of the applicants were not as clear as represented, but on the contrary they found on investigation that the furniture was originally purchased in a manner not as disclosed by the applicants. Counsel for respondents said the company wanted a little time to make further enquiries from Mr. McCarthy, who was at present in England.

Mr. Benjamin was for the applicants and Mr. Burton was for the respondents.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Why don't you pay the rent?]

Mr. Burton: The company is in liquidation.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: That does not matter.]

Mr. Burton having been heard in argument, asked for a postponement until 12th December, in order to allow the liquidators to make further inquiries.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: When a company is placed under liquidation, it is equivalent to placing a private estate under sequestration. If this had been a private estate, no doubt Mr. Bevern would have been entitled under the contract to have had his property returned. The liquidators have not shown to the Court anything why Bevern should not be allowed to remove the furniture, which he had leased to the company, and which the liquidators are using day by day, for the benefit of the liquidation. Bevern is suffering day by day the depreciation of his property, by its use by the liquidators. They cannot be allowed to continue to have the benefit of the contract unless they undertake to pay what is stipulated for therein. It will be ordered that the respondent forthwith deliver up to the applicant the furniture mentioned in the agreement, and this application will be granted with costs, unless the respondents undertake within three days to pay the purchase price specified.

Ex parte THE ESTATE COETZER.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order to raise a loan of £650, on certain property, which had been bequeathed by the deceased spouse to the petitioner, Anna Susannah de Klerk.

The matter was ordered to stand over for further inquiries by the Master.

MCKILLOP V. WOLFE AND MCKILLOP.

This was an application upon notice calling upon the curator bonis and applicant's wife to show cause why he should not be released and discharged from curatorship, under which he was placed on the ground of prodigality by order of the Court, dated the 3rd November, 1904, and why he should not be re-invested with his estate.

The applicant's affidavit stated that he had been almost a total abstainer since the order of Court was granted, and he asked to be re-invested with his estate. He desired to be rejoined by his wife. Affidavits by a medical man and the Rev. F. O. Watters, of Wynberg, were also read, speaking to the improved condition and habits of the applicant during the past six months or so.

The answering affidavit of Mrs. McKillop (to whom applicant is married in community) expressed the opinion that applicant's abstemious habits were due to the moderate amount allowed to him each month by the curator. She believed that if the applicant were re-invested with the estate the results to the estate would be disastrous, because it was at present in a critical condition, and in danger of being placed under sequestration. Applicant did not bring anything to the joint estate; he did nothing for a living, and he did not even attempt to obtain employment. Counsel also read an affidavit by the curator, Arthur K. Wolfe, who said that while he should like to see the applicant re-invested with his estate, he thought it was inadvisable at the present juncture.

The replying affidavit of the applicant denied the allegation that his improved habits were attributable to the restricted allowance on which he had been placed by the curator. He urged that he had advanced the value of the estate since his marriage to the respondent.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for applicant, James Henry McKillop, of Newlands; Mr. Benjamin was for respondents.

Buchanan, A.C.J., asked what was the occupation of the applicant.

Mr. Buchanan (after consulting with his client) said that the applicant was formerly a salesman, and had a shop in Loop-street.

Buchanan, A.C.J., asked counsel whether it would not be better to let the estate continue under its present administration.

Mr. Buchanan said that his client would not object to the joint estate being continued for some little time, with Mr. Wolfe as financial adviser.

Mr. Benjamin said that his client merely desired to protect the interests of the estate.

Buchanan, A.C.J., granted an order releasing the applicant from personal curatorship. Mr. Wolfe to remain administrator of the joint estate, pending a further order of Court. The order declaring the applicant to be a prodigal would be discharged, costs to come out of the joint estate. His lordship added that he was glad to notice the improvement in the applicant's condition, and he hoped that it would continue.

Ex parte THE ESTATE WATSON.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order for the appointment of a curator ad litem in the estate of George Petersen to be joined as defendant in an action relating to the lease of certain premises at Colesberg.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones appeared for the executor of the estate of Mrs. Petersen.

His Lordship said that the Court would appoint the executor as curator ad litem to the minors, qua executor, costs to abide the result.

Ex parte THE ESTATE ROBERTSON.

Mr. Wright moved for an order authorising the survey of certain property in the district of George, bequeathed by the late Alfred George Robertson, so as to determine the boundaries of adjacent farms, The Lakes and Oukraal, and define the rights of the legatees under the will.

Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared to oppose the application, and produced affidavits by Wm. Robertson, of Eastbrook, division of Knysna, and others.

[Buchanan, A.C.J., said he thought the only thing to be done was to direct the parties to proceed by an action, in which all persons interested in the estate should be joined. No order would be granted on the present application.

Ex parte LYONS.

Mr. Lewis moved, on the petition of Sarah Lyons, of Hanover-street, Cape Town, for leave to sue her husband Solomon Lyons, commonly known as Frank Lyons in forma pauperis. The parties were married in London, and applicant desired to sue for judicial separation.

The matter was referred to Mr. Lewis, who certified forthwith, and a rule was thereupon granted calling on the defendant to show cause on the 12th December.

Ex parte EDROOS.

Mr. Roux moved for the removal of certain conditions mentioned in the codicil of a will, so as to enable petitioner to raise a sum of £450 on a building at Wynberg, left by the testator to be used as a mosque, in such manner as to give, as security for the advance of £450, the right to the persons to whom the mortgage was to be passed to sell the property in execution free from the conditions of the said codicil, should the property not realise sufficient to cover the bond and interest when put up to auction subject to the conditions of the codicil.

No order was granted.

Ex parte OLIVIER.

Mr. Sutton moved for an amendment of an order of Court authorising petitioner to pass a mortgage on certain property in the division of Uniondale.

Order granted.

Ex parte MOSTERT AND OTHERS.

Mr. De Waal moved for an order for the amendment of a deed of transfer. The transfer was made to a man stated to have married in community, whereas he was married out of community.

Order granted.

Ex parte STRUWIG.

Mr. Sutton moved for an order authorising transfer to be passed of a certain erf at Hanover.

No order was granted, His Lordship stating that the only course that could be adopted was to apply to a judge in chambers under the Derelict Lands Act.

Ex parte MARAIS AND ANOTHER.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan moved for leave to sell certain property at Bedford.

Order granted.

Ex parte SADIE.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for cancellation of a bond on certain property in the district of Darling. The bond had been lost, but the amount due thereon had been paid.

Order granted.

Ex parte DOUNE.

Mr. Sutton moved for an order for the amendment of a bond by inserting the full name of petitioner, John Gilbert Venables Doune, in place of John Gilbert Doune.

The matter was referred to the Registrar of Deeds.

Ex parte SUSSMAN.

Mr. Roux moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property at Port Elizabeth. The property had been bought with money given to petitioner by her son, and was registered in her name. Her husband was a lunatic, and had no property. She had sold her property, and now asked for an order to pass transfer.

Order granted.

Ex parte VIGNE AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Pyemont moved for an amendment of certain diagram.

Order granted in terms of Registrar's report.

Ex parte CARDINAL.

Mr. Wright moved for an order authorising the Master to pay out a sum of £64 from the funds in his hands, to which petitioner was entitled under the will of his father. The petitioner was unable to obtain a billet, and required the money for his support.

Order granted.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice (the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP, and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

DUNCAN V. RESIDENT MAGIS- (1905.
TRATE OF MOSSEL BAY.) Nov. 13th.

Marriage of minor—Consent of parent.

Where a parent raises no objection to the marriage of a minor child, but refuses to give express consent, such lying by cannot be construed as tacit consent.

Should the parent unreasonably refuse or withhold consent, the minor may apply to the Chief Justice, in Chambers, to authorize the marriage.

Mr. Swift said that he wished to mention a matter which should have come on for hearing on Friday last, an application for a mandamus against the Resident Magistrate of Mossel Bay.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Is it an opposed matter?]

Mr. Swift: No, but it is a matter of some urgency, as the applicant wishes to get married.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Oh, I am afraid, then, counsel must give way for that.]

Mr. Swift said that this was an application calling upon Mr. Robert Charles Ferris, in his capacity as Resident Magistrate of Mossel Bay, to show cause why a mandamus should not be issued against him to solemnise the marriage of John Robinson Duncan and Emerentia Wilhelmina Pienaar, both of Mossel Bay, in accordance with notice dated the 6th October last. Counsel read an affidavit by the applicant (Duncan), who said that he was a bachelor, aged 21 years and upwards, and was engaged to be married to Miss Pienaar, with her full consent and approbation. Miss Pienaar was aged 20 years 4 months. Her mother and sole natural guardian resided at Mossel Bay. On the 6th October last deponent, in terms of Act 16, 1860, duly forwarded to Mr. Ferris notice of the marriage, to be solemnised within three months. The banns had been duly published. The mother and sole natural guardian of Miss Pienaar, as well as all persons whom it may concern, had had due notice of the said intended marriage, and no objections whatever had been lodged with Mr. Ferris. The said Ferris, in his capacity aforesaid, refused and declined to solemnise the said marriage, on the ground that the consent of the mother and sole natural guardian of Miss Pienaar has to be obtained. Mr. Swift, in answer to the Court, said that the mother had not consented, but his contention was that, as she had not raised any objection to the intended marriage, after due publication of the banns, her consent should be taken to have been given.

Hopley, J., put it to counsel whether it would not have been much better, seeing that the mother was in Mossel Bay, to have ascertained definitely whether she consented? That, it seemed to him, would have been the more common-sense course.

Mr. Swift said that due notice had been given, and the mother had not actively objected to the marriage.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Without the consent of parents or of the guardians of the minors, minors cannot marry in this country.]

Yes, but must she have the active consent? Will not the passive consent be sufficient?

[Maasdorp, J.: It is a very different thing giving a mandamus to an officer to do a thing which may be an irregularity, from overlooking an irregularity after it has been committed. It seems to be taken for granted that this is an irregularity, but that no penalty should be imposed.]

Mr. Swift thought that that was rather a converse case.

[Hopley, J.: You cannot take it that she has given her consent, because she is a "passive resister."]

But may the mother sit by and raise no objection? If she raised an objection, then we could come to the Supreme Court and ask for a licence. But she simply sits by and adopts a passive attitude. She won't either agree to the marriage or object to it.

[Hopley, J.: Then you have the Chief Justice to come to.]

We have no objection on which we can ground a petition to the Chief Justice. We don't know why she objects.

[Hopley, J.: The more reason why you can come to the Chief Justice and say that she objects without reason.]

[Maasdorp, J.: You might have made the mother a party to this matter.]

Mr. Swift: Yes, my lord, I recognise that.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: According to the law of this country, minors are not entitled to marry without the consent of their parents, or natural guardians, or, failing such natural guardian or parent, of one of the judges of the Court. It is true that when a marriage takes place under certain circumstances of minors, the Court will not upset the marriage, but it is a very different thing, as Mr. Justice Maasdorp has observed, to order an official to commit an irregularity, and to condone an irregularity after it has been committed. This is an application to compel a Magistrate to commit an irregularity, viz., to marry a minor who does not produce the consent of her parent. On that simple ground, the application must be refused. The minor is not without redress. If without valid reason or without good cause the parent withholds her consent, applicant may under the new Act apply to the Chief Justice or to a judge in Chambers.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Dold and Van Breda.]

Ex parte THE ESTATE VAN REENEN.

Mr. Bailey moved as a matter of urgency for the appointment of Mr. Gother Mann as provisional trustee in the insolvent estate of Jan Frederick van Reenen, farmer, Oudo Kraal, Koeberg division.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The matter came before me in Chambers, and I pointed out that under section 43 of the Insolvent Ordinance a Judge in Chambers had no power to appoint a provisional trustee. The Ordinance gives the power to the Court, and it gives the power to a Judge on circuit either in court or out of court. In future, these cases should not be put in the Chamber book. You may take your order, Mr. Bailey, in terms of the petition.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

ADMISSIONS. } 1905.
Nov. 14th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the admission of Pieter Andries Malan as an attorney and notary.

Application granted, oaths to be taken before the R.M. of Worcester.

Mr. Close moved for the admission of Stanislaus M. Joseph O'Farrell as an attorney.

Application granted and oaths administered.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

WHITTALL V. BAILIE.

Mr. Roux moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

MURISON V. KELLY.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £220, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for £1 11s. 6d. insurance premium, for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable, and for the High Sheriff to be authorised to collect rents accruing from the property.

Order granted.

ESTATE JOUBERT V. DAVISON.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £900, with interest, and for £16 8s. insurance premium, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

BOLUS AND CO. V. PATERSON AND SON.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for plaintiffs; Mr. Burton was for defendant.

Mr. Searle moved for judgment for (1) £1,584 5s. 8d., owing by virtue of certain eight bills of exchange drawn by plaintiff upon defendant, together with interest, due and payable on demand in terms of clause 8 of certain agreement, entered into between plaintiffs and defendant in London on the 19th July, 1905, and (2) £4,000 money owing by defendant to plaintiffs for cash advances and commission, with interest. Counsel said that one of the bills had been retired, and the remaining bills would fall due at short dates.

Buchanan, A.C.J., asked counsel on what ground he sought for provisional sentence?

Mr. Searle: We say that in the absence of any breach of the agreement we can by notice call up the amounts due at any time. The agreement does not say that it is necessary that the defendant should commit a breach.

Buchanan, A.C.J., held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to provisional sentence, and directed them to go into the principal case, costs to abide the result, failing action, provisional sentence refused, with costs.

ESTATE KERB V. GOLOMBRICK.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,250, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of half-yearly interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

BRYANT AND HOOD V. BARTLETT.

Mr. W. Swift moved for provisional sentence upon an unsatisfied judgment of the Magistrate's Court for £15 odd and costs.

Ordered to stand over for further information, as to why the matter was brought to this court.

Later in the day, on an explanation by counsel, provisional sentence was granted.

ESTATE GOUSSARD V. BESTER.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on an acknowledgment of debt for £100, with interest.

Order granted.

BERNARD V. LE SUEUR.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a judgment of the Magistrate.

trate's Court at Cape Town for £5 5s. 7d. and £2 1s. 7d. costs of suit, defendant having removed to the jurisdiction of Oudtshoorn R.M.'s Court, and for a decree of civil imprisonment.

Order granted.

CAROLESEN V. PAULSE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of this Court for £17 19s. 3d., less £15 4s. 1d. paid, with interest, and also for £13 9s. 1d., £8 12s. 10d., and £2 13s., being costs and charges.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the original debt was £17, of which £15 was paid, leaving something under £2 unpaid. The rest of the claim was for costs incurred by plaintiff against defendant.

Mr. Jones explained that an action had been pending, but the parties agreed to allow the matter to go to arbitration, subject to the award being made a rule of Court by either party. Before the award could be made a rule of Court the defendant left, and the costs would be the costs incurred therein. The matter came up before his Lordship before the award was made a rule of Court. The sum of £15 appeared to have been the result of an execution. There was no voluntary payment. Defendant was originally here, and before the award was made a rule of Court he left for Kimberley.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that a telegram had been received from defendant offering £2 10s. a month, first payment on December 1. Defendant also said that he could not possibly pay more, as his wages were only £4 a week, and he had a wife and family to support.

Mr. Jones said that he would accept the offer.

Decree granted, execution to be suspended upon payment of £2 10s. a month, first payment on the 1st December.

BOSMAN V. FLETCHER.

Mr. Roux moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £133 4s. 8d., with interest, the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of instalments; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Defendant appeared, and complained that plaintiff had not allowed him the time agreed upon. He was willing to pay the interest that had become due.

Mr. Roux said that the bond provided for the payment of £10 a month in reduction of the capital.

Order granted, His Lordship remarking that if defendant wanted to set aside the bond he must take steps accordingly.

DE VILLIERS V. ESTATE BREDEVELDT.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £255, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

The executor in the defendant estate appeared and consented to judgment.

Order granted.

BATTENHAUSEN V. VORSTER.

Mr. Wright moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £1,000, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of notice having been given; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

The matter was ordered to stand over for proof of notice.

BATTENHAUSEN V. VORSTER.

Mr. Wright moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £600, with interest, the bond having become due by reason of notice having been given.

Ordered to stand over for proof of notice.

THATCHER V. VORSTER.

Mr. Lewis moved for provisional sentence upon an unsatisfied judgment of the Magistrates' Court at Somerset East for £7 15s. 11d., with taxed costs, and messenger's charges, and for certain property at Pearston belonging to defendant to be declared executable.

Order granted.

KEWE V. WOODMAN.

Mr. Long moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £75, with interest: the bond having become due by reason of the non-payment of interest; counsel also applied for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

CAPE TIMES, LTD. V. YEOMANS AND FERGUSON.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £44 19s. 9d., with interest and costs.

Order granted.

JACKMAN V. LAITE.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for provisional sentence upon an agreement of purchase of certain property in Bath-street, signed by both parties. It appeared that the parties entered into a settlement in regard to an action which was about to be heard. Plaintiff now moved for payment of £1,425, whereof the defendant had already paid £175, the balance to be paid in terms of the settlement, plaintiff tendering transfer and conveyance on payment of the balance of purchase price.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for defendant), submitted that this was not a case for provisional sentence. He read an affidavit by defendant, in which he stated that it was agreed that he should pass a bond to plaintiff for the balance of £1,425. He went on to allege that he was not aware at the time he entered into the agreement that provisional sentence had been granted against Jackman on a mortgage bond for £1,100 and that the property he had purchased had been declared executable, or he would have entered into the agreement. Further negotiations took place, and he later on discovered that a second mortgage for £100 was registered against the property. He had been informed further that there was a sum of £70 due to the Corporation of Cape Town in respect of making up the roadway. Deponent submitted that plaintiff had throughout the transaction entered into undertakings that he could not perform.

Mr. Jones read a replying affidavit by plaintiff, who denied that he had made representations to defendant which were without foundation. He said that he was quite prepared to give defendant transfer as soon as the latter raised the balance of purchase price. Counsel also read an affidavit by Mr. Syfret, attorney to one of the judgment creditors of Jackman.

Provisional sentence granted, with costs.

STEVENS V. ANDREWS.

Mr. Benjamin was for plaintiff; Mr. Burton was for defendant.

Mr. Benjamin said that this was an application for confirmation of a writ of arrest. He had to ask that the matter be allowed to stand over.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the writ of arrest would be confirmed pro forma, and the other questions raised in the case would stand over for further hearing.

FICK V. TANNER.

Mr. Roux moved for a provisional order of sequestration to be made final.

Mr. Benjamin read an affidavit by Mr. McLeod (who had acted as defendant's attorney) in opposition to the application.

Mr. Roux read a replying affidavit by a member of the firm of Van der Byl and De Villiers (plaintiff's attorneys).

Mr. Benjamin submitted that the sole object of this application was to force a cancellation of the sale of certain property in 1903 to defendant, of which, however, he had not yet taken transfer. Defendant had tendered the purchase price so long ago as January, 1904, but apparently the applicant was not prepared to pass transfer. The property had increased in value far beyond the expectation of the plaintiff.

Final adjudication granted as prayed, with costs.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

SMYTH AND ANOTHER V. MOORREES. 1905. (Nov. 14th.)

Mr. Swift moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for an account of moneys received and disbursements made by defendant in his capacity as agent of plaintiffs.

Order granted, account to be rendered within one month of date.

CAPE TOWN GAS CO. V. DOBSON.

Mr. Roux moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £21 15s. 6d., account for gas supplied, etc.

Order granted.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Bailey moved for the discharge from insolvency of Cocnraed Peter Hendrick Mocke.

Granted, subject to production of Master's certificate.

Mr. Bailey moved for the release from sequestration of the estate of Abraham Ezau.

Granted.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the rehabilitation of Petrus Jacobus Terblans.

Rehabilitation granted.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Ex parte SMUTS.

Mr. Du Toit moved for a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act to be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte CANABIE.

Mr. M. Bisset made a similar application under the Derelict Lands Act. Rule made absolute.

Ex parte ESTATE OOSTHUYZEN.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved, on behalf of the executors testamentary of the estate of Johannes Jacobus Oosthuyzen, for confirmation of sale of property in the division of Cathcart for the sum of £8,250.

Order granted, subject to the children giving a joint indemnity for the amount received, the balance of purchase price to be retained by the executors, or paid into the Guardian's Fund.

Ex parte ESTATE DU TOIT.

Mr. McGregor moved to make absolute a rule for confirmation of sale.

Rule made absolute.

GOURLAY V. BAUMGARTEN AND GATES.

Dr. Rainsford moved to make absolute a rule nisi calling upon the respondents to show cause why certain partnership should not be placed under liquidation, and why Mr. J. E. P. Close should not be appointed receiver. Counsel asked that costs be costs in liquidation, except costs of postponement, which it was asked should be paid by Baumgarten.

Order granted accordingly.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

LIS V. REX AND COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. 1905. (Nov. 15th.)

This was an application upon notice to the Attorney-General for the release of the applicant from custody or, alternatively, for his admission to bail pending the trial and decision of any issues of law or fact that this Court may consider necessary.

Dr. Greer was for applicant; Mr. Nightingale appeared for the Crown and Colonial Government.

Dr. Greer said that he now desired to apply for a postponement of the hearing of the application until to-morrow, so as to enable applicant to file certain additional affidavits, but he asked that he might in the meantime be released from custody. Counsel went on to explain that the applicant alleged that on Monday, the 13th inst., he was arrested at the instance of Mr. C. W. Cousins, the officer in charge of the Immigration Department, and he was at present detained in custody at the Roeland-street Gaol, and was threatened with deportation from this colony under the Immigration Act of 1903. He was informed that his arrest was wrongful and unlawful, and that the said Act did not apply to himself. He was a Russian by nationality, and came to this colony about five years ago with the firm intention of making South Africa his domicile, and permanent place of abode. He had never departed from South Africa since his first arrival, and he now claimed South Africa as his place of abode. His place of residence in this colony was Cape Town, and he resided there before the war with the late South African Republic. During the war he resided in Cape Town, and on the 24th January, 1901, he was enrolled in the Cape Town Guard of the Colonial Defence Force, and served therein, having got a good discharge.

Mr. Nightingale did not object to a postponement, but said that there was strong evidence that the alleged discharge was a forgery.

The application was postponed until to-morrow (Thursday), but applicant was admitted to bail, pending the hearing, bail to be given to the satisfaction of the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, applicant in the sum of £100 and two sureties of £50 each, a condition of the bail bond to be that applicant will appear at all times when called upon, and will abide any order or judgment of the Court, and, when required, surrender himself to custody.

Postea (November 17th).

Mr. Nightingale said that he was not ready to proceed with the respondents' case, and he had to apply for the matter to be postponed. In the meantime he was prepared to consent to Jack Lis being admitted to such bail as he could find. He (counsel) understood that Lis had been unable to find the bail fixed by the Court at Wednesday's hearing, and he now consented to the applicant being released on his own recognisances, subject to the same conditions as were prescribed in the previous order.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the applicant would be admitted to bail on his own recognisances.

Mr. Nightingale said that there were one or two facts on the affidavits directly in issue, and he anticipated that it would be rather difficult on the affidavits to come to a conclusion as to the true facts. What he would ask was that the Court should order the attendance of Lis himself and two persons who had made affidavits on his behalf on the day of hearing.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Well, subpoena them.] His Lordship added that he did not see when this matter was going to be heard within the next few days, and he suggested that the hearing should be postponed until the 12th December.

Counsel acquiesced, and the hearing was accordingly postponed until the 12th December.

Dr. Greer said that application had been made to the Government for leave to inspect the regimental records, but this had been refused.

Mr. Nightingale said that if a properly-authorized person went to the Colonial Secretary's Office, no objection would be raised to allowing an inspection of the records.

Dr. Greer: From the Attorney's Office?

Mr. Nightingale: Yes.

The matter was then ordered to stand over till the 12th December, applicant to be admitted to bail in such recognisances as he may be able to find, and subject to the conditions already laid down.

COWLING'S ESTATE v. (1905.
COWLING. (Nov. 15th.

Estate of deceased spouse—Minor heirs — Executor — Advance by survivor to enable executors dative to bring an action against himself.

C. and his wife were married in community and had issue. At the time of Mrs. C.'s death these children were minors, but C. took no steps to protect their interests, and remained in possession of the entire joint estate. Subsequently, when about to re-marry, he made a declaration that the value of the joint estate was under £100. The executors dative to the estate of the deceased now applied for an order, calling upon C. to pay certain moneys to enable them to bring an action to have it declared to what sum the heirs of the deceased were entitled.

Held, that although in ordinary cases a plaintiff cannot compel a defendant to advance money to meet the costs of an action; yet, as these executors represented a wife married in community, an order must be granted as prayed.

This was an application brought by the executors dative in the estate of the late Charlotte Cowling upon notice calling upon her husband, John Frederick Cowling, hotelkeeper, Claremont, to show cause why he should not pay a certain sum of money to enable applicants to bring an action for the purpose of having it settled what is to be awarded to the heirs of Mrs. Cowling.

The affidavit of the applicants set out that the respondent and the late Mrs. Cowling were married in community, that in January, 1887, at her death, there were two children issue of the marriage, and that the respondent did not file a death notice or an inventory. The respondent subsequently remarried, having passed no kinderbewys in favour of the children by his first marriage. He had declared on oath that the value of the joint estate was less than £100. Deponents had reason to believe that this statement was not correct. Applicants desired to institute an action on behalf of the heirs to obtain an order against respondent, requiring him to render an account of the joint estate, but there were no funds available for that purpose. It was absolutely necessary for the due administration of the estate that the action now pending may be proceeded with in view of the fact that since 1887 the respondent had been in possession of the joint estate of his late wife and himself.

The respondent in his answering affidavit said that at the death of his wife the assets in the joint estate were not sufficient to meet liabilities. Respondent entered at some length into the position of the joint estate at his wife's death.

Mr. Searle, K.C., was for applicants, W. A. Currey and C. H. Wolfe; Mr. Burton was for respondent.

Further affidavits having been read,

Mr. Searle argued that the applicants were entitled to the payment of a sum by the respondent to enable them to institute an action. The respondent had the joint estate in his control and possession, and the heirs were without means to commence an action.

Buchanan, A. C. J., said that the executors might sue in forma pauperis.

Mr. Searle said that he did not think it would be quite the thing for gentlemen in the position of the applicants to sue in forma pauperis.

Mr. Burton: It would not be befitting their dignity.

Mr. Searle went on to urge that, although the applicants called upon the respondent to provide funds for an action against himself, if he had performed his duty in connection with the joint estate, the executors would not have been placed in this awkward position.

Mr. Burton said that the respondent was quite prepared to render an account of the estate as it was in 1887.

Mr. Searle: He has been a long time about it.

Mr. Burton: Well, he has neglected it; but he has neglected it because there was nothing to be gained by filing an account, and he does not seem to have clearly understood his duty. The applicants now want, and they intend to claim, half of the estate as it is at present.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: Under ordinary circumstances, a plaintiff could not compel a defendant to make an advance towards the costs of an action which the plaintiff wishes to bring against the defendant. But this case is a peculiar one. The Court frequently, in case of a dispute between husband and wife, orders the husband to make an advance to the wife for the purpose of enabling her to bring an action, and that is more frequently done in cases of community of property than in cases where the wife has a separate estate. Where the parties are married in community of property, and the husband is in possession of the whole of the joint estate, very frequently the Court has ordered the husband to make an advance to the wife. The applicants in this case are the executors of the wife's estate, and they stand very much in the same position as the wife would have been in. Respondent and his late wife were married in community. The wife died in 1887, leaving two children, who are minors. No steps were taken to protect the minors' interests, when afterwards the husband was about to re-marry. He only made a declaration to the effect that the value of the estate was below £100. The affidavits now disclose that the husband is in possession of the joint estate, that there were two minors, that the husband neglected to get an executor appointed, that he omitted to file an account showing what the minors were entitled to. He has neglected this duty from 1887 to the present time. The affidavits also disclose grounds for believing that there are substantial assets in the estate. How far these assets must be brought up as part of the joint estate is a matter which cannot now be decided. Under these special circumstances, I think it is only fair that the husband should be compelled to make the advance to the applicants, who now represent the wife's estate. Whatever money is advanced by the husband will be brought up in the action. I think that £50 would be a reasonable amount to order to be advanced. The respondent will be ordered to advance £50 out of the joint estate towards the costs of the action to be brought by the executors, costs to abide the result.

REINECKE V. CIVIL COM- (1905, MISSIONER OF CERES. (Nov. 15th.

Divisional Council—Election.

R. was one of two candidates for election as representative of a certain district of a Divisional Council. R. was unsuccessful. It was supposed that the district in question was entitled to return only one member, and nominations were invited for candidates to fill the one vacancy. After the election it transpired that the district was entitled to return two members, and R. claimed the second seat.

Held, that as there was only one seat contested, and that as R. had not been elected, he was not entitled to the seat which he claimed.

This was an application upon notice to the Civil Commissioner and Returning Officer of the Divisional Council of Ceres for an order declaring the applicant (Dr. Reinecke) to have been elected a member of the said Council.

From the affidavits, it appeared that in August, 1904, the respondent, by notice in the "Government Gazette," called for nominations for the election of Divisional Councillors for Ceres. Two nominations—applicant and one C. J. van der Merwe—were received for District No. 1, where, according to the notice issued by the returning officer, there was one vacancy to be filled. A poll was taken on the 18th October, and Mr. Van der Merwe was elected by a majority of twelve votes over Dr. Reinecke. Applicant said that on the 17th October (the day before the poll) official notification was given by the secretary of the Divisional Council to the Civil Commissioner of the fact that District No. 1, as the seat of magistracy, was entitled to be represented by two members, and applicant made a verbal request to the Civil Commissioner to be declared a member of the Council, but the latter ruled that a poll was necessary. The explanation of the respondent was that District No. 1 had hitherto returned only one member, and that nominations were called for one vacancy entirely through a misapprehension.

Mr. Burton for applicant; Mr. Benjamin for respondent.

Mr. Burton argued that the applicant was entitled to be elected as a member for the ward. The whole difficulty, he said, was due to the mistake of the Civil Commissioner. It had been said that if it had been officially declared that there were two vacancies a third candidate (Mr. Smith) would have been nominated, and that, therefore, Dr. Reinecke would not have had an unopposed return. But the fact remained that an election was announced, nominations were called for, and the applicant was duly nominated, and as there were two vacancies he was entitled to be declared elected to the other vacancy.

Mr. Benjamin contended that if the application were granted the right of the voters to elect their representatives on the Council would be prejudiced. Dr. Reinecke now wanted to take a seat on the Divisional Council without going through the customary form of election. There must, counsel submitted, be a fresh election, giving the public an opportunity of exercising their rights and privileges. It would be most unfair that Dr. Reinecke should be elected when there perhaps was a more popular candidate in person of Mr. Smith, who, if he had known that there were two vacancies, would have offered himself for nomination at the election.

Mr. Burton in reply said that, as regarded prejudice, the balance of prejudice seemed to be rather against the applicant than the public. Dr. Reinecke would have had a better chance of being elected where there were three candidates for two seats than he would where there were two candidates for one seat.

Buchanan, A.J. C.: The question raised in this case has never arisen before, and it is one that is not likely to arise often, but it is an important question, and I should have liked to have had it argued before a full bench. I think the fundamental principle which underlies all elections to public offices is that holders of office, representatives of the people must be elected by the people. In this case the applicant does not seem to me to have been elected by the people to the Divisional Council. The election of members of the Divisional Council was treated as if there were only one vacancy in each district, and nominations were called for for candidates to fill the one vacancy in each district. The election took place for one Councillor for each district. It so happened that between the last general election and the present election, district No. 1, which formerly returned only one member, was now entitled to return two members. The election, however, did not proceed as if there were two seats to be filled. The notice given by the Civil Commissioner, in the first instance, calling for nominations, followed the words of the Act where only one member for each district is to be elected. Where more than one member for each district is to be elected, that fact is intimated in the notices calling for nominations. The notice called, in fact, for nominations for one seat in each district. The Divisional Council Act provides for an automatic increase in the number of members under certain circumstances. Where it transpires that the district in which the office of Civil Commissioner is situated contains ratable property to the value of two-sevenths of the whole of the property in the Division, that district may return a second member, if three-eighths of the ratable value of the property of the whole division, then three members, and so on. A valuation was taken in 1904, from which it would appear that this district was entitled to elect two members instead of one, but nobody had noticed this fact. The returning officer was unaware of the fact, the secretary of the Divisional Council was unaware of the fact, and the public were unaware of the fact, and, therefore, only one nomination was called for. It so happened that the day before the polling took place it was discovered that the district would be entitled to two members, but the election proceeded on the supposition that the district was only entitled to one member. Had there been time to stop the whole election and to call for fresh nominations, the Court might have directed such a course to be adopted. The applicant was nominated as a candidate for the one seat, and his election was contested. No protest was lodged by Dr. Reinecke against the poll, but he took part in it, and when he was defeated he came forward, and says that as this district could now elect two members, and as only two candidates were nominated he must be declared elected to the second seat. I think the fallacy underlying the thing is that there was only one seat contested, and for that seat the applicant was not returned. I think, under the circumstances, looking at the different sections of the Act, and the fact that the public are entitled to elect the persons who shall represent them, and that Dr. Reinecke has not been chosen to take a seat on the Divisional Council, the application must be refused. There will be no order as to costs.

BATTENHAUSEN V. VORSTER.

Mr. Wright said that proof of notice to the defendant had now been filed as required by the rules of Court. He now moved for provisional sentence upon two mortgage bonds, and for the property specially hypothecated to be declared executable.

Order granted.

KING BROS. V. ESTATE WASSERFALL.

This was an application upon notice calling upon Mr. G. W. Steytler, in his capacity as secretary of the Colonial Orphan Chamber, to show cause why a writ should not be issued for costs in connection with a certain case of which he had charge, as executor in the estate of one Wasserfall. Mr. Searle, K.C., was for applicant; Mr. Burton was for respondent.

The matter, it appeared, arose out of an application brought by King Bros. for an order under the Derelict Lands Act, vesting them with certain lots of ground at Durbanville. Judgment was granted in favour of applicants, with costs. The applicants now moved for costs de bonis propriis.

His Lordship directed that the matter should go before Mr. Justice Hopley, who tried the original case, and ordered that the application stand over till the 12th December.

Ex parte VAN DER WALT AND DE JAGER.

Mr. Burton moved on the petition of the natural guardians of certain 17 minors for leave to execute a mortgage bond upon certain farm in the division of Aberdeen, in the estate of their late grandparents.

Order granted, expenditure of money raised to be to the satisfaction of the Master.

Ex parte FLAUM.

Dr. Greer moved to make absolute a rule nisi authorising the petitioner to sue a certain firm in St. Petersburg, Russia, in forma pauperis, and also for leave to sue by edictal citation.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, citation to be served personally and to be returnable on the 1st February. The applicant was also given leave to sue in forma pauperis. Dr. Greer to be counsel and Messrs. Friedlander and Du Toit to be attorneys to the applicant.

LAZARUS AND OTHERS V. { 1905.
ESTATE LAZARUS AND { Nov. 15th.
OTHERS. " 20th.

Will—Interpretation—Substitution.

This was an action for a declaration of rights.

The declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are the major unmarried children of the late Lawrence Lazarus, and the curator of the minor child Marie Lazarus. Victoria Lazarus is the widow of the late Lawrence Lazarus, and is sued individually and also together with George William Steytler in their capacity as the executors testamentary of the said Lawrence Lazarus. Edwin Groome Rainsford is sued as curator ad litem of Vera, Hilda and Gerald Morris, minor grandchildren of the late Lawrence Lazarus.

2. On the 9th of February, 1887, the said Lawrence Lazarus duly executed the testamentary writings, copies of which are annexed hereto, and to the originals, of which the parties beg to refer; and he died on the 1st of May, 1889, leaving the said testamentary dispositions in full force and effect. His widow is alive and has not re-married.

3. At his death the said testator, Lawrence Lazarus, left eight children, to whom he was greatly attached, and with all of whom he was on the most affectionate terms. The eldest child was 17 years old and the youngest three months old at their father's death. One of the testator's daughters was married after his death to Moss Henry Morris, and died thereafter, leaving the three children Vera, Hilda, and Gerald aforementioned. The other daughters of the testator are unmarried and supported by their mother, who also supports the three minors Morris.

4. At the testator's death his estate was greatly indebted and heavily mortgaged, and it now consists of the landed properties specifically mentioned in the will, namely, those numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, and 6, the whole of the residue of the testator's estate and the property secondly numbered and described as occupied by Bowley having been sold and realised to pay off the indebtedness of the testator; and all the debts and mortgages have been paid.

5. £1,000 per annum has been paid to the said widow of the late Lawrence Lazarus.

6. The said widow has agreed to forego and waive any interest and rights she may have under and by virtue of the said testamentary writings over and above the right to receive the said sum of £1,000 per annum.

7. Under and by virtue of the said testamentary writings the plaintiffs contend: (a) That after payment to the said widow of £1,000 per annum, each of the children of the said late Lawrence Lazarus is entitled to be paid one-eighth share of the rents already derived, or still to be derived, from the said landed properties referred to in paragraph 4 hereof. (b) That the said widow Victoria Lazarus, is entitled to the sum of £1,000 per annum while living and unmarried. (c) That upon the death of the said widow, or upon the execution by her of the aforesaid surrender and waiver, the said properties referred to in paragraph 4 hereof become the absolute property of the testator's children. (d) Or, as an alternative to (c), that upon the death of the said widow, or upon the execution by her of the aforesaid surrender and waiver, the rents derived from the said properties referred to in paragraph 4 hereof are divisible among the testator's children.

Wherefore the plaintiffs claim: (1) A declaration of rights in terms of clauses (a), (b), (c), or as an alternative to (c) in terms of clause (d) of paragraph 7 hereof. (2) Alternative relief. (3) That all costs be paid out of the estate of the said late Lawrence Lazarus

The defendants contended that the whole of the estate was to accumulate during the widow's lifetime with the exception of the £1,000, and after her death it was to go on accumulating until the last surviving child of the testator died, and then it was to be divided among such grandchildren as were living or their descendants, or alternatively, that even if the children were entitled to a share of rents during the mother's lifetime and their's, then after the death of the last surviving child, the rights in the property went to the grandchildren.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. P. S. T. Jones) for the plaintiffs: Mr. Screiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Swift) for the defendants: Dr. Rainsford curator ad litem.

Abraham Lawrence Lazarus, eldest son of the late Lawrence Lazarus, and one of the plaintiffs in the case, stated that when his father made his will in 1887 there were seven children, and his father was on good terms with all his children. On coming of age witness and his two brothers received £750 each, and one of his sisters £500; saving that, nothing else was paid. The rent derived from the property was considerably over £1,000. There were other properties besides those mentioned in the will.

The original will was as follows:

1. I hereby appoint my wife and children my sole heirs of the whole of my estate and effects; it is my desire that the property corner of Longmarket and Plein streets, known as Victoria Chambers shall not be sold during the lifetime of my wife and children, but be let, and the rent divided among the heirs.

2. The property now occupied by Mr. Bowley is not to be sold for less than £1,200, failing such offer to be treated same as Victoria Chambers. The houses and three shops in Longmarket-street are not to be sold, but be managed in same way as Victoria Chambers. The shop next to De Vries in Longmarket-street is likewise to be administered as Victoria Chambers.

4. The property corner of Long and Shortmarket streets, unless claimed by present tenant under lease, is also to be managed as Victoria Chambers.

5. The property annexed to the above, now occupied by Boas, is also to be administered as Victoria Chambers.

6. The property opposite to the Royal Hotel in Plein-street, and Staffordshire House, opposite Stigants, and the property in Breda-street, are not to be sold, but be managed as Victoria Chambers.

7. The realisation of the rest of my estate I leave to the discretion of my executors; no child shall have the right to claim any portion of his or her inheritance during the lifetime of my wife and so long as she remains unmarried.

8. In the event of my daughters, or either of them, marrying before the death of my wife, they shall be entitled to the sum of five hundred pounds each by way of marriage settlement.

9. At the majority of either of my sons, should they, or either of them, feel disposed to enter into business, they shall be entitled to a sum of seven hundred and fifty pounds sterling, provided such business shall meet with the approval of my executors.

10. Should my wife re-marry she shall not be entitled to anything more out of my estate.

11. I desire my executors to pay my mother for life £20 sterling quarterly, being at the rate of £80 per annum.

12. I bequeath to my brother, Joseph Lazarus, the sum of two hundred and fifty pounds sterling, and to my brother Jacob one hundred pounds sterling.

13. I appoint as my executors and guardians of my minor heirs my wife and George William Steytler (secretary), or the secretary for the time being, of the Colonial Orphan Chamber Trust Company, with all powers allowed in law, especially that of substitution.

14. Should any of my children marry out of the Jewish religion they are all, or any of them, forthwith disinherited.

As Witnesses: Cape Town, 9th January, 1897.

—Alex. Chiappini. —L. Lazarus.
—C. F. Faure Juritz.

15. I desire that my wife shall during her life and so long as she shall remain unmarried, draw a sum not exceeding one thousand per annum for the maintenance and support of herself and all my children, excepting, of course, those that may be married, or shall have started in business. Any accumulation of rents or interest after payment of the above sum shall revert to my estate.

16. After the death of my children I appoint my grandchildren, if any, as my heirs, failing grandchildren my lawful descendants.

As witnesses: Cape Town, 9th January, 1887.

—Alex Chiapinni. —L. Lazarus.
—C. F. Faure Juritz.

George William Steytler, Secretary of the Colonial Orphan Chamber, one of the defendants, as executor in the estate, stated the will produced was in his handwriting. Witness copied the will from a draft. When Lazarus died in '89 the property was involved in heavy liabilities, and the Chamber financed the estate. There was an accumulation of £1,779, and four daughters had yet to get £500 each on being married. The rent had almost doubled itself since the death of the testator.

By Dr. Rainsford: He was quite clear that the house in Longmarket-street was not covered by the house and three shops mentioned in the will.

By Sir H. Juta: If witness had made one copy of the will it would have been signed only once, yet there was a break in the will, and it was signed twice.

This was all the evidence in the case, and Counsel having been heard in argument,

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (November 20).

Maasdorp, J.: The parties to this suit propose to effect a family arrangement in respect of the estate left by the testator Lawrence Lazarus, and the questions arise whether all the interested persons are represented in the matter, and whether there is anything in the will which precludes the proposed arrangement. After carefully considering all the provisions of the will, I have come to the conclusion that I shall be obliged to have recourse to a rule of construction which it is, fortunately, unnecessary to make frequent use of. The case mainly depends upon the question whether, by the last clause of the will, the testator intended to make a fidei commissary disposition of his property, or a direct substitution of heirs; and the rule of construction I refer to is to the effect that, in case of doubt, the will must be interpreted so as to favour a direct rather than a fidei commissary substitution. The will has, of course, to be construed as a whole, with the object of discovering the real intention of the testator, and as a general rule, this results in ascertaining such intention beyond any reasonable doubt; but the present will is so inartistically drawn, that it is impossible for me to say that after everything has been considered, all doubts are entirely removed. The last clause of the will reads as follows: After the death of my children, I appoint my grandchildren, if any, as my heirs, failing grandchildren, my lawful descendants. I am inclined to the opinion that the true construction of this clause, read by the light of the other portions of the will, reveal the intention of the testator merely to substitute the grandchildren or further descendants in the place of the children in case the children should be by death prevented from succeeding the testator as his heirs. The phraseology here used is not such as is generally employed to provide for the devolution of an estate from a fiduciary to a fideicommissary heir; and does not seem to express the idea that the children after enjoying the property for life shall pass it on to the grandchildren. But it rather conveys the idea of the grandchildren taking as heirs directly from the testator, in the event of the children not taking. I do not say that the use of the words: "After the death of my children I appoint my grandchildren my heirs," may not in a different context, and, when literally construed, express a fideicommissary disposition. It is certain that if the clause is literally construed it would lead to very curious results, and results inconsistent with the intention of the testator as expressed in other portions of the will. One result as contended in the argument would be that if any of the children died their children would not immediately succeed to their portions, but the grandchildren would have to wait until all the children were dead, and be in the meanwhile unprovided for. I am, therefore, of opinion that the mere literal interpretation of the clause cannot be adopted, and I come to the conclusion, with the aid of the rule of construction mentioned above that this clause merely provides, as is usually done in wills, that if any of the children should happen to die in the lifetime of the testator the descendants of such children shall come into their places by representation. It was contended that the prohibition against the sale of certain properties, in the first clause, during the lifetime of the wife and children, favours the construction that it was the intention of the testator that these properties should under the last clause pass to the descendants of the children. But upon reference to clause seven it appears that no such prohibition exists in respect of what was certainly at one time regarded as the great bulk of the estate. And it must be borne in mind that a prohibition against selling does not prevent certain other modes of alienation, as, for instance, by will. To my mind, the prohibition in clause one was not introduced in favour of descendants, but for the purpose of constituting a fund or investment for the joint benefit of the wife and children, and such investment or fund is to be kept up during the lifetime of the wife and children. I cannot hold, as was contended, that the prohibition would come to an end upon the death of the wife, any more than upon the death of one of the children. But, on the other hand, I think that upon the consent being given of all parties in whose favour it was made, it can be terminated. I quite agree that if it were provided in the will that an heir shall not take until a certain event occurs, such heir will not be entitled to claim the property until the happening of the event. But in this case there is nothing to stand between the heirs and the property. They may take the property, but after doing so they may not sell during the lifetime of the wife and children. The prohibition in question operating only in favour of the wife and children and the representatives of such children as have died since the death of the testator, I am of opinion that by consent of all of them it can be terminated. In view of the proposed family settlement, no question arises under clause fifteen as to whether the rents under clause one contributed to the £1,000 provided for the wife. In order to ensure to her this provision, it was provided in the will that the residuary estate shall not be claimed by the heirs during her lifetime, or as long as she remains unmarried, and even the surplus in hand had for that purpose to go to swell the estate. Here again this provision was solely for her benefit, and she can renounce it. The estate vested in the children, although they could not claim it until her death, and there is nothing to prevent their disposing of their vested rights, even during her lifetime. The postponement of the rights of the children does not in this case create rights in favour of others at the time of the mother's death, as was the case in some of the cases cited at the bar. I am of opinion that there is nothing in the will to prevent the making of the family arrangement proposed by the parties, if all the interested parties consent. They are the mother, the children, and the legal representatives of the deceased daughter. Who the legal representatives of the daughter are has not been made clear. Whether it is her husband or her children must be ascertained. A declaration is made in terms of paragraph (a) and (b) of the plaintiffs' contentions, with this proviso that it is made wholly irrespective of the question of the widow's renunciation of her rights, and with the following amendments: Insert after the word children, "or his or her legal representatives," and alter one-eighth into one-ninth. As to contention (c), it is declared that upon the death of the widow the properties shall pass as absolute property to her heirs, and to the children or their legal representatives. As to the further contention in paragraph (c), it seems to me the matter depends upon the terms of the waiver and the condition of the family settlement. The widow possesses, not merely a life interest which she can renounce, but is joint heir to the property, and that would have to be dealt with. It is not only a case of her standing aside and allowing the other heirs to take under the will, but she has adiated and possesses vested rights which must be specifically dealt with in the settlement. A declaration to the following effect may suffice for the purposes of the parties, that it is within the power of the widow, her children, and their legal representatives to enter into a settlement whereby the properties may now be transferred to the children or their legal representatives in full ownership, costs to be paid out of the estate. Mr. Lazarus declared a necessary witness; Mr. Percy Jones appointed to represent the minor in the settlement. The executors to continue their administration pending the settlement.

LEVY V. WYNNESS.

Mr. Rcux was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default. Counsel moved under Rule 319 for judgment for £250, with interest and costs of suit. The defendant had leased an hotel from the plaintiff and failed to insure certain furniture, which was destroyed by fire. The defendant had been sued by edictal citation, and had promised to settle, which, however, he failed to do.

Maasdorp, J., considered, under the circumstances, the claim was not a liquidated one, and ordered the matter to stand over for consideration by counsel as to whether he should move to have the case removed to Dordrecht or apply for a commission to take the evidence of the plaintiff.

Ex parte INSOLVENT ESTATE of 1905.
GOLDING. } Nov. 16th.

Mr. Bailey moved to make absolute a rule nisi for the amendment of certain proceedings in the insolvent estate of Morris Golding, otherwise styled Moses Golding, and for an interdict restraining the respondent from selling, alienating, or encumbering certain property recently transferred to him.

Rule made absolute.

WILSNACH V. VAN DER WEST-) 1905.
HUIZEN AND ANOTHER. (Nov. 16th.

Spoliation—Compensation for improvements.

Certain land in the village of A. remained registered in the name of one D. (now deceased). Some 30 years ago D. sold the land to one K., who paid for the same but never took possession. He gave to one H. a right to occupy a house on the property. This house gradually fell into such a state of dilapidation as to become a public nuisance, and no Divisional Council rates had been paid on the property for 6 years. The Council, instead of attaching the property and selling for arrears of rates, gave W. leave to occupy the house. He did so, paid arrears of rates and made the place habitable. After he had been in undisturbed possession for some years, H. alleged that he had purchased the house from K., and in W.'s absence made forcible entry.

Held, that H. had committed an act of spoliation that he must give up possession to W. and might then (if so advised) bring an action of ejectment against him.

Semble, even in the event of H. succeeding in such action, he would be bound to compensate W. for his improvements and to refund to him the money paid for arrear rates.

This was an application upon notice calling upon the respondents, Van der Westhuizen and Haak to restore to applicant possession of a certain house and ground situate at Prince Albert.

From the numerous affidavits which were read it appeared that the applicant alleged that he had been wrongfully deprived of possession of a house standing on Erf No. 30, which he had been given leave to occupy by the Divisional Council. The property at the time Wilsnach entered upon possession was in a most dilapidated condition, and was derelict. Applicant paid the arrear rates to the Council. Applicant expended money to put the property into a habitable state. He declared that the respondents had, either or both of them, obtained possession by spoliation. The position of the respondents was that the applicant had no right to enter upon possession of the property, and that it was registered in the name of another. It was emphatically denied that forcible possession had been taken of the premises.

[Mr. Van Zyl for Applicants. Mr. Upington for Respondents.]

Mr. Van Zyl, during the hearing of the case, was proposing to put in from the Bar certain replying affidavits, when Buchanan, A. C. J. asked why the affidavits had not been filed.

Mr. Van Zyl said that he was unable to say, as he had only just come into the case.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: We find that the attorneys are always charging in their bills of costs for filing affidavits, and they never do file them. I think that the Taxing Master ought to look carefully into these matters.]

Mr. Van Zyl said it was clear that the petitioner was the bona fide occupier of the premises by arrangement entered into with the Divisional Council, which arrangement the respondent described as having been illegal. Under the 4th section of the Derelict Lands Act the Divisional Council had a right to attach properties on which the rates were in arrear for the last five years. On this property the petitioner stated that the secretary of the Divisional Council stated the rates were in arrear for the last six years.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: The Council have no right to let other people's property; they have a right to attach and sell it. At this stage it is immaterial whether he is a bona fide or a mala fide possessor.]

Mr. Van Zyl said that the chief point was the circumstances under which the respondent obtained possession of the property. What the petitioner asked now was to be put back into the former position, on the ground that he had been ejected.

Mr. Upington said that the petitioner made application to the Court on the ground that respondents were spoliators, and that they had taken forcible possession of the property. If it were clear that the respondents had taken forcible possession, then, of course, there was no principle clearer in law than that the applicant must be replaced in possession. But what was the respondent's position? Two facts were undisputed, one that the registered owner sold to Knight, and (2) that Knight sold to Haak. Counsel submitted that the applicant had the most precarious of all tenures. He had a mere licence from the Divisional Council, who did not pretend to be the owners, such a licence that when the rightful owner appeared the applicant was at once to give up possession. Such possession, he submitted, was not possession sufficient to found a possessory action of this kind. As to the question of spoliation, Mr. Upington contended that force was a necessary ingredient of spoliation, and that no force was used by Haak in taking possession.

Buchanan, A. C. J.: This is an application in which the petitioner prays for an order compelling the respondents to restore to applicant a certain house and premises which the respondents forcibly possessed themselves of, and for costs of this application. It appears that certain landed property in the village of Prince Albert stands registered in the name of the late John Dyason. Respondents now allege that over 30 years ago this property was sold by John Dyason in his lifetime to one Knight, and Knight has made an affidavit, in which he states that he paid Dyason by working for him. Knight never took possession, and some years ago he left Prince Albert, taking no further interest in it. It is alleged that Knight gave a person the right to occupy the house, but, if so, this person abandoned the property. For some six years before proceedings were taken the property, being derelict, had become a nuisance through rubbish being deposited thereon and the house became so dilapidated that only the four walls were standing. Under these circumstances the Divisional Council intended to have the property attached as derelict property, and sold for payment of arrear rates. On the application of the petitioner, however, they allowed him, so far as they were concerned, to take possession of the property. He paid the arrear rates, removed the nuisance, renovated the buildings, and, according to the affidavit of the mason, carried out such repairs as to make the house habitable. Some years after it had been in possession of the applicant the respondent Haak alleged he found out where Knight was, and secured an order from Knight to have the premises handed over to him, and in July last Knight is alleged to have sold the property to Haak. At this time applicant was in peaceable possession of the property, and had been for years. Haak wrote to the applicant to give up possession on the 29th November, and, as the applicant says, when he received this notice, and was going to the house, he found that Haak had placed his tenant in possession of the building. Applicant says he had locked up the house when he had stored certain grain therein, that he had not unlocked the same again, that he had the key in his possession, and that, on receiving this notice from Haak on the 29th August, between the hours of seven and nine in the evening, he went to the house in question to see whether the same was still properly locked, and found Van der Weethuyzen in possession. He says admission must have been obtained either by forcing the door open, or by unlocking it with some other key. All this is denied by respondents, but this is a clear case of unlawfully taking possession of premises in the occupation of another person. It is said that the taking possession did not matter if the applicant had no right of retention. Assuming, for the sake of argument, even that the applicant was a mala fide possessor, he was entitled to compensation for any permanent improvements he had made to the property. As far as one can ascertain from the affidavits, the property has been considerably enhanced in value by the applicant's outlay, and, moreover, the applicant had saved it from being sold as derelict property by paying the arrear rates. The whole foundation of the rule for the restoration of property taken possession of in this way is, that a spoliator is not entitled to take the law into his own hands, and a person who takes the law into his own hands must restore the property and establish his right in a court of law. Respondent must restore this property forthwith to the applicant, and then, if he wishes to establish his title to the property, he must bring his action to eject the applicant, in which action the applicant can set up his right to any compensation for improvements. It is a matter of considerable importance to the applicant whether or not he remains in possession, because the very possession is the only right which affords him security for recovering his compensation. The application will be granted, and the respondents ordered forthwith to restore possession of the property, with costs. I may, for the sake of saving litigation, and seeing that the parties are, I think, poor persons, suggest to the applicant that, if reasonable compensation is paid to him, and the arrear rates are paid to him, he ought not to contest the respondents' claim further. The order will be granted as a writ of spoliation.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Dempers and Van Ryneveld; Respondent's: Not on record.]

Ex parte MCKINNON.

Mr. Gutsche moved for the amendment of the entry of petitioner's name in the Debt Registry and Deeds Registry to John Monro McKinnon, the consent of the mortgagees having been obtained.

Order granted.

Ex parte SANDERS.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to sue the Cape Town Tramways Co. in forma pauperis. Counsel presented the usual certificate.

Rule nisi granted, calling upon the respondents to show cause, rule to be served personally, and to be returnable on the 12th December.

VUSO V. VUSO.

Mr. Lewis moved, on the petition of Shadrach Vuso, for leave to sue his wife by edictal citation for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce. Counsel explained that petitioner originally sued his wife for divorce on the ground of adultery, but some difficulty was experienced in regard to serving process on defendant, and eventually an order was obtained to serve process at the house of her father in King William's Town. Defendant was believed to be in East London, but she could not be found. The matter was set down for the 24th October, but at the last moment petitioner could not find the witness on whom he relied for evidence as to the adultery, and he now wished to institute fresh proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Defendant is still in the country?]

It is absolutely impossible to find her.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: She is not supposed to be out of the country, is she?]

It is not known where she is; she is believed to be in East London. Counsel informed his lordship that petitioner was a native, resident at the location at Maitland.

Leave to sue by edictal citation granted, personal service to be effected, failing which, one publication in the "Government Gazette" and "Imvo," citation to be returnable on the 12th January.

Ex parte ESTATE BAUER.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for confirmation of certain sale of property situate at Claremont in the estate of the late Johan Bauer, petitioner being one of the executors.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE CHAPMAN.

Mr. Bailey moved, on the petition of the executrix testamentary, for leave to raise a certain mortgage bond on property situate at Port Elizabeth.

Order granted.

Ex parte ESTATE WORDON.

Mr. Van Zyl said that this matter had previously been before his lordship, and was then referred to the Master for report. The Master had now reported very briefly as follows: "I have inquired into this application, and I find that the whole matter is so surrounded with difficulties that the compromise arrived at, now before the Court, appears to have been the best way out of it."

Order granted.

Ex parte MONTAGU D.R. CHURCH.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for an order authorising the Master to pay out certain sums in his possession in connection with bonds passed to the petitioners.

Order granted in terms of Master's report, costs to come out of fund.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. LOTTER.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an award of arbitrators to be made a Rule of Court.

Award made a Rule of Court.

Ex parte DONNE.

Mr. Sutton again mentioned the matter of the petition of John Gilbert Venables Donne, who applied to have his name amended as it appears on a mortgage bond. His name was entered on the bond as John Gilbert Donne. The matter had been referred to the Registrar of Deeds, who now reported: "It is very desirable that the transfer deed, mortgage bond, and Debt Register folio concerned should be amended. I beg to recommend that an order be granted authorising me, upon production of mortgagees' consent, to make the necessary alterations."

Order granted in terms of Registrar's report.

Articles unfit for human food—
Act 5 of 1890, Sec. 6.

A person cannot be convicted under Sec. 6 of Act 5 of 1890 of exposing for sale articles of food unfit for human consumption.

Maasdorp, J. said that a case had come before him as Judge of the week, in which one Sammy was charged before the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Malmesbury with contravening section 6 of Act 5 of 1890 in having sold a quantity of fish, which was unfit for human consumption. He pleaded guilty, and was fined £50, or three months' imprisonment. It seemed, however, that the section under which the accused was charged did not apply to the circumstances of the case. It was quite possible that the conduct of the accused might be treated as an offence under some other law, but, as it did not fall under that section, the conviction and sentence must be quashed.

Mission station — Rules — Contract—Declaration of rights —Ejectment.

A certain Missionary Society had acquired the absolute dominium of a certain farm for the purpose of a mission station, and had established thereon a settlement for coloured people. Rules for the good government of the settlement were drawn up by the Missionaries, to which all persons who settled on the land were required to assent. These rules were read to the people from time to time, but were not printed for many years. In 1881, these rules (with a few unimportant modifications) were printed and circulated. The rules provided, inter alia, that any erf holder on the station could be ejected from his holding on a month's notice subject to his right on a fixed scale of compensation for his improvements. Three of the defendants who had persisted in breaking certain rules of the station received such notice, but refused to comply therewith. Other two had received no such notice but had transgressed the rules by refusal to pay rent, on the ground that they had a quasi proprietary right in their holdings. The Society now claimed a declaration of rights as against the defendants, an order of ejectment and arrears of rent from those who had refused to pay, tendering at the same time compensation for improvements as fixed by the rules.

Held (1) that the rules, as printed, formed the basis of the contract between the Missionaries and the people; (2) that the Society was, therefore, entitled to an order of ejectment against the defendants; (3) that the defendants were entitled to compensation for their improvements, such compensation to be subject to set off for rent due, or other legal liabilities.

This was an action for a declaration of rights brought by Friedrich Eich, in his capacity as the trustee of the Rhenish Mission Society, against John Barron, Jury Muller, alias Jury Moller, Andreas Goedeman, and Philip Engelbrecht.

The declaration in respect of the first four clauses was the same in the case of all four defendants, and was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is the Reverend Friedrich Eich, of Worcester, in his capacity as the Trustee of the Rhenish Mission Society (an incorporated body established at Barmen in Germany for the advancement of religious work in foreign parts), and as such the duly authorised representative in this colony of the said society, vested in law with its property in the Colony, and the proper person to sue in this action.

2. The defendant resides on the said society's property known as Saron in the district of Tulbagh.

3. The said society are the registered owners in full and free property of certain landed estate in the last preceding paragraph hereof referred to. The said property was purchased by the society at various times, and the society subsequently established a mission station thereon under the local management of a "Leeraar" or minister, with a view to the religious and secular welfare of natives and other persons who should be allowed by the society to reside upon the said property.

4. With the above objects, the society framed a set of rules called the "Saron-sche Gemeentewetten" or Saron Church Laws, and no native or other person has been allowed to come and live upon the said property without binding himself either verbally or in writing to pay a certain monthly rental for the ground occupied by him, and to observe strictly all the said rules (Gemeentewetten) for the time being in force as made by the society for the good of the residents.

The declaration in respect of the defendant Barron proceeded:

5. Amongst the persons so allowed to reside upon the said property was defendant, who, on or about April 16, 1900, was granted the occupation as a tenant at a rental of 1s. 6d. a month of a certain half-erf thereon in terms of a written agreement, whereby he bound himself, as a condition of his said occupation faithfully to observe the said "Gemeentewetten" on pain of forfeiting his privilege of residing at Saron aforesaid, and the defendant has continued since then to occupy the said half-erf upon the said terms, and has paid the said rent up to the end of the year 1904.

6. By rule 5 of the said "Gemeentewetten" the occupation of said half-erf by the defendant could be determined by a month's previous notice on either side.

7. By rule 6 thereof it was provided that "buildings which a lessee has erected on an erf may, when he receives notice to quit, be pulled down by him or he may sell them, at the valuation of the directors to the Rhenish Society." It was further provided, by an additional rule agreed to and signed by the defendant, that the highest sum which should be paid for a house in case a resident of Saron transgressed the rules and had to quit, the place should not exceed £25.

8. By rule 15 it is provided that no person may establish a butchery without the permission of the said "Leeraar" (minister).

9. By rule 21 it is provided that anyone who will not obey the rules of the institution must leave the place.

10. In or about November, 1904, the defendant, in direct opposition to and in defiance of the said rules, wrongfully and without the permission of the minister, opened a butchery, upon the half-erf occupied by him as aforesaid, and, in spite of repeated warnings and protests addressed to him by the minister, has refused to close the said butchery and continues to contravene the said rules in the above respect.

11. On or about April 26, 1905, the plaintiff, as he lawfully might, duly gave the defendant notice to quit the said estate within a month's time at the same time tendering to compensate him for his house in terms of the said agreement, but the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully refused, and still refuses, to regard the said notice or to quit the said estate, and claims that the said half-erf is his own property.

12. The said house of the defendant is valued by the plaintiff at £20, and the plaintiff is willing, and tenders upon the defendant quitting the said estate, to allow him to break down and remove from the said estate the said building, and any other buildings or improvements he may have acquired or built or made thereon, or in the alternative to pay him the said sum of £20, or the value of the said house, and of any other structures or improvements as aforesaid as may be assessed in terms of the said agreement or as may be fixed by an independent party or parties, or as may be decreed by this Honourable Court.

The plaintiff tendering as aforesaid, claims: (a) A declaration of rights as between himself and the defendant in respect of the defendant's said occupation in the premises; (b) a declaration that the said half-erf is the property of the said society, and that the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendant therefrom and from the said estate of Saron either upon the defendant's refusal to be bound by or to obey any of the said rules or upon due notice given to him thereunder, upon payment of compensation as above tendered; (c) an order ejecting the defendant with his family and belongings from the said half-erf and from the said estate of Saron; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit.

The declaration in respect of the defendant, Jury Muller, proceeded:

5. Amongst the persons so allowed to reside upon the said property was the defendant, who, on or about September 5, 1896, was granted the occupation as a tenant of a certain erf at a rental of 3s. per month in terms of a written agreement, whereby he was given the said occupation for such time as he observed the said rules and paid his rent at the stipulated time, and the defendant has continued since then to occupy the said erf upon the said terms (save that since 1901 the said rent has been reduced to 2s. 3d. a month), and has paid the rent thereunder up to the end of the year 1903.

6. By rule 21 of the said "Gemeentewetten" anyone who will not obey the laws of the institution is obliged to leave the place.

7. By rule 19 every lessee must have paid his rent by the end of the year. The defendant has contravened the said rule by failing to pay any rent since the end of the year 1903. There is still due and unpaid by him to the plaintiff the rent in respect of the said erf for the year 1904, to wit, the sum of £1 7s.

8. The plaintiff has demanded payment of the said sum from the defendant, who however refuses to pay the same, and claims that he and his heirs are entitled to the use and occupation of the said erf in perpetuity without payment of any rent to the plaintiff.

9. By rule 6 of the said "Gemeentewetten" it is provided that buildings which a lessee has erected on an erf may, in case he receives notice to discontinue the lease, be pulled down by him, or he may sell them according to the estimate of the directors to the Rhenish Society.

The plaintiff claims: (a) A declaration of rights as between himself and the defendant, in respect of the defendant's said occupation in the premises; (b) a declaration that the said erf is the property of the said society, and that the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendant therefrom, and from the said estate of Saron upon the defendant's refusal to be bound by or to obey any of the said rules, and that the defendant's occupation of the said erf is limited by the terms of his said agreement and his observance of the said rules, including the rule as to payment of rent; (c) payment of the sum of £1 7s. as rent aforesaid; (d) an order ejecting the defendant, with his family and belongings, from the said erf and from the said estate of Saron, by reason of the defendant's contravention of the said rule respecting the payment of rent, the plaintiff tendering to allow the defendant to break down and remove from the said estate any buildings or other improvements he may have acquired, built, or made thereon, or in the alternative to pay him the value of such buildings and improvements as may be assessed under the said rules or as may be fixed by an independent party or parties, or as may be decreed by this Honourable Court; (e) alternative relief; (f) costs of suit.

The declaration in respect of the defendant Goedeman proceeded:

5. Amongst the persons so allowed to reside upon the property was the defendant, who, in or about 1881, was granted the occupation as a tenant of a certain erf thereon at a monthly rental of 3s., upon condition that he obeyed the said rules, and the defendant has continued since then to occupy the said erf upon the said terms and has paid the rent thereunder up to the end of the year 1903.

6. By Rule 21 of the said "Gemeentewetten" anyone who will not obey the laws of the institution is obliged to leave the place.

7. By Rule 11 thereof it was provided that every inhabitant of the institution must attend the religious services on Sunday as well as in the week regularly. The defendant has contravened the said rule in that during the last twelve months he has wholly failed to attend the said services.

8. By Rule 19 every lessee must have paid his rent by the end of the year. The defendant has contravened the said rule in that he has neglected to pay his rent, namely, the said sum of £1 16s. due at the end of 1904, and the said sum is still due and unpaid. The defendant, moreover, claims that he is not bound to pay any rent whatsoever in respect of his occupation of the said erf, and has incited certain of the other tenants of the said society to refrain from paying their rent.

9. By Rule 3 the lessee of an erf may, with the permission of the "Leeraar" (minister), have the use of certain sowing land for which a small rental is to be paid. The defendant has contravened the said rule by entering upon and cultivating in the years 1903, 1904, and 1905, certain sowing land on the said estate without the permission of the said minister, and he has continued to cultivate the said land without such permission, and in spite of repeated warnings, and remonstrances addressed to him by or on behalf of the minister, and has refused, and still refuses, to pay any rental therefor.

10. By Rule 5 of the said "Gemeentewetten" the occupation of the said erf by the defendant could be determined by a month's notice on either side.

11. By Rule 6 it was provided that buildings which a lessee has erected on an erf may, in case he receives notice to discontinue the lease, be pulled down by him, or he may sell them, according to the estimate of the directors to the Rhenish Society.

12. On or about the 26th of May, 1905, the plaintiff, as he lawfully might, gave the defendant notice to quit the said erf and the said estate generally by the 1st of July, 1905, the plaintiff at the same time tendering to pay the value of a house erected on the said erf as ascertained in terms of the said rules or by arbitration or to allow the defendant to break down and remove the material thereof, but the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully refused, and still refuses, to regard the said notice or to quit the said erf and estate.

13. In addition to the said house, which is valued by the plaintiff at about £35, the defendant has also an interest by virtue of his marriage in community to his wife, Elizabeth Goedeman, in half of another erf occupied in the name of one Eva Balie, and the plaintiff is willing and tenders, upon the defendant quitting the said estate, to allow him to break down and remove therefrom the said house and any other structures or improvements he may have acquired or built or made thereon, or in the alternative to pay him the said sum of £35 and £1 the value of his interest in the other said erf or the value of the said house and of any other structures or improvements as aforesaid and of his interest in the other erf as may be assessed in terms of the said rules, or as may be fixed by an independent party or parties, or as may be decreed by this honourable Court.

The plaintiff, tendering as aforesaid, claims: (a) A declaration of rights as between himself and the defendant in respect of the defendant's said occupation in the premises; (b) a declaration that the said erf is the property of the said society, and that the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendant therefrom and from the said estate of Saron, either upon the defendant's refusal to be bound by or to obey any of the said rules, or upon due notice given to him thereunder, upon payment of compensation as above tendered; (c) Payment of the sum of £1 16s., as rent aforesaid; (d) the sum of £10 as damages sustained by reason of the defendant's wrongful cultivation of the said sowing land, his wrongful inciting of other tenants as aforesaid, and his contravention of the said rules in other respects; (e) an order ejecting the defendant, with his family and belongings, from the erf occupied by him and from the said estate of Saron; (f) alternative relief; (g) costs of suit.

The declaration in respect of the defendant Engelbrecht proceeded:

5. Among the persons so allowed to reside upon the said property was the defendant, who, in or about the month of May, 1887, was granted the occupation as a tenant of a certain erf thereon (being No. 241), at a rental of 3s. a month, on condition that he observed and was bound by the said rules, and the defendant has continued since then to occupy the said erf upon the said terms, and has paid the rent thereunder up to the end of the year 1903.

6. By Rule 21 of the said "Gemeentewetten," anyone who will not obey the laws of the institution is obliged to leave the place.

7. By Rule 19 thereof, every lessee must have paid his rent by the end of the year. The defendant has contravened the said rule by failing to pay any rent since the end of the year 1903. There is still due and unpaid by him to the plaintiff the rent in respect of the said erf for the twelve months to the end of the year 1904, to wit, the sum of £1 16s.

8. The plaintiff has demanded payment of the said sum from the defendant, who, however, refuses to pay the same, and claims that he and his heirs are entitled to the use and occupation of the said erf in perpetuity without payment of any rent to the plaintiff.

9. By Rule 6 of the said "Gemeentewetten," it is provided that buildings which a lessee has erected on an erf may, in case he receives notice to discontinue the lease, be pulled down by him or he may sell them, according to the estimate of the directors, to the Rhenish Society.

The plaintiff claims: (a) A declaration of rights as between himself and the defendant, in respect of the defendant's said occupation in the premises; (b) a declaration that the said

erf is the property of the said society, and that the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendant therefrom, and from the said estate of Saron, upon the defendant's refusal to be bound by or to obey any of the said rules, and that the defendant's occupation of the said erf is dependent and conditional upon his observance of the said rules, including the rule as to payment of rent; (c) payment of the sum of £1 16s. as rent aforesaid; (d) an order ejecting the defendant with his family and belongings from the said erf and from the said estate of Saron, by reason of the defendant's contravention of the said rule respecting the payment of rent, the plaintiff tendering to allow the defendant to break down and remove from the said estate any buildings or other improvements he may have acquired, built, or made thereon, or in the alternative to pay him the value of such buildings and improvements as may be assessed under the said rules, or as may be fixed by an independent party or parties, or as may be decreed by this Honourable Court; (e) alternative relief; (f) costs of suit.

The plea of the defendant Barron was as follows:

1. Defendant admits paragraphs 1 and 2 of plaintiff's declaration.

2. Defendant admits paragraph 3 thereof, but says that, according to the laws to which the contract between the parties is subject, and which are hereinafter referred to, the "Leeraar" is bound to act according to the advice of a Raad or Council to be chosen (according to the said laws) by the inhabitants every year. Defendant says, further, that the last election of members of the said Raad took place about three years ago.

3. Defendant admits paragraph 4, but says that the laws therein referred to were framed by one Rev. Mr. Kulpman for and on behalf of the Rhenish Mission Society, at the time when Saron was originally laid out as a town, and were contained in a certain book, which was kept in the possession of the duly authorised representative of the Rhenish Mission Society for the time being at Saron. The rules set out in paragraphs 6, 7, 8, and 9 of plaintiff's declaration did not form part of the said laws.

4. With regard to paragraph 5, defendant says that he was born at Saron, and that he has lived there from the time of his birth, and that he is living there at the present time. Defendant denies that he bound himself by any written agreement, or that he authorised any person to so bind him. Defendant admits that he became a tenant at the said rental, and says, further, that the rent of the said half-erf for the year 1905 is not yet due and payable. Defendant admits, further, that his tenancy was subject to certain laws, but says that these laws were those referred to in paragraph 3 hereof, and not those referred to in plaintiff's declaration.

5. With regard to paragraphs 6, 7, 8, and 9, defendant denies that the Rules 5, 6, 15, and 21 therein set forth formed part of the laws framed by Rev. Mr. Kulpman, and denies that he is bound by the said rules.

6. Defendant denies paragraph 10. He admits having opened a butchery at Saron in or about the month of November, 1904, but denies that he did so in direct opposition to and in defiance of the rules binding upon him. He says that the said butchery was opened with the full knowledge of the minister, who consented to the opening, and allowed defendant to complete all his preparations for such opening, but, he says further, that on the day before the opening the minister objected, all the preparations having in the meantime been completed. Defendant denies having been repeatedly warned by the minister to close the butchery, and denies that he has in any way contravened any of the rules binding upon him. Defendant says that, under the rules referred to in paragraph 3 hereof, the permission of the "Leeraar" was not necessary to enable him to establish a butchery, the said rules merely requiring notice to be given that the butchery was to be opened, which notice was duly given by defendant to the duly-authorised representative of the Rhenish Mission Society. Defendant says further that, save as hereinbefore set forth, the first notice received by him in connection with his having opened the butchery was given on or about the 26th of April, 1905, which notice was verbally repudiated by defendant.

7. With regard to paragraph 11, defendant admits having received the said notice, and admits that he refuses to regard the said notice or to quit the said estate. Defendant denies that his conduct in so doing is wrongful and unlawful, and defendant denies that he at any time claimed, or that he now claims, the said half-erf as his own property. Defendant maintains that he has faithfully carried out his part of the said contract, and that he is lawfully entitled to remain in undisturbed occupation of the said half-erf, in terms of the contract subsisting between the parties.

8. With regard to paragraph 12, defendant denies that £20 is a fair and reasonable valuation of his house and his other structures and improvements. Defendant further maintains that if this Honourable Court should decide that plaintiff is entitled to eject defendant (which defendant does not admit), defendant is lawfully entitled also to compensation for the loss of the grazing, planting, and other rights secured to him by the said laws referred to in paragraph 3 hereof.

9. Save as above, defendant denies all and singular the allegations in plaintiff's declaration contained.

As a claim in reconvention, the defendant alleges that, by virtue of the contract subsisting between the parties, defendant is entitled to remain in undisturbed occupation of the said half-erf, so long as he faithfully carries out the provisions of the said contract, and is entitled under the said laws to transfer his right to his children, or, failing children, to any of defendant's relations by affinity or consanguinity. Wherefore defendant claims: (a) A declaration of rights as between himself and plaintiff in respect of the said contract; (b) a declaration that plaintiff is not entitled to eject defendant from the said half-erf, so long as defendant carries out the provisions of the contract; (c) alternative relief; and (d) costs of suit.

The defendant Muller, in his plea, stated that he had never received occupation of the full extent of land leased, and claimed an abatement of the rent to the extent of £3 2s., in respect of such want of occupation. He said that he had tendered the rent for 1904, which plaintiff had refused to accept until he signed certain new conditions which he refused to do. He stated that he was prepared to leave Saron, although not legally bound to do so, upon payment of £200, in respect of building and improvements, and of grazing rights. In reconvention, he claimed the sum of £3 2s. in respect of the want of occupation of certain land included in the contract between the parties.

The defendant, Goedeman, in his plea, stated that he had tendered the rent for 1904, which the plaintiff refused to accept until he signed certain new conditions. He stated that he had been prevented from attending the society's church by the duly authorised representatives of the society, and had consequently been compelled to attend Divine service elsewhere. With regard to the sowing lands, he denied that such permission was necessary. He admitted that he had had the use of certain sowing land, and that under the said laws one-half of the quantity sowed had to be paid to the society's duly authorised representative, and said further that he had tendered the said one-half to Mr. Hartwig, the duly authorised representative of the society, but the said Mr. Hartwig refused to accept the same. With regard to paragraph 12, defendant admitted that he received the said notice, and that he refused to regard the said notice or to quit the said estate. He denied that his conduct in so doing was wrongful or unlawful. With regard to paragraph 13, defendant admitted that he had the said interest in half of another erf, but denied that £35 and £1 was fair and reasonable valuations of his said house and his other structures and of improvements and of his said interest in half of another erf respectively. He claimed in reconvention a declaration of rights as between himself and plaintiff in respect of the said contract, and a declaration that plaintiff is not entitled to eject defendant from the said erfs so long as defendant carries out the provisions of the said contract.

The defendant Engelbrecht, in his plea, stated that he had tendered the rent for 1904, which plaintiff refused to accept until he had signed certain new conditions. He maintained that, if plaintiff was entitled to eject defendant (which he did not admit), defendant was lawfully entitled to compensation for buildings, structures, and improvements, and also to compensation for the loss of grazing, planting, and other rights. In reconvention he claimed a declaration of rights as between himself and plaintiff, and a declaration that plaintiff is not entitled to eject defendant so long as he carried out the provisions of his contract.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for plaintiff. Dr. Greer (with him Mr. Alexander) for defendants.

Friedrich Eich, residing at Worcester, stated that he was the trustee and representative of the Rhenish Mission Society, and put in plans of the society's property at Saron in the division of Tulbagh. Witness proceeded to give evidence in support of the declaration in respect of the case of John Barron.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: The station at Saron was purely a missionary society. In former times he believed there had been trading enterprise conducted.

Johan Godlieb Christian Leipoldt, residing at Worcester, stated that he was the "Leeraar" of Saron in 1874, and there were then certain rules which were well understood by the congregation. There was no difference between the rules, produced in Court, and those in force in 1874. The rules were well understood by the people, and were read out in church from time to time.

Elias Schrenk gave evidence as to the rules being in existence, and as to these being read out to the people. In 1877 a conference was held, and the rules were then printed. The rules, as printed, were exactly the same as those existing in former times. He had never heard of any other rules at Saron, and had heard of no objections to the rules since 1875. He knew of two cases of men who had been expelled for disobeying the rules.

Cross-examined by Mr. Alexander: The two expulsions which had taken place there during his recollection were on account of drunkenness. The offenders would not submit to punishment, and were, therefore, sent away. During the whole time he was there there was a Raad in existence, which was elected by the people. People charged with breaches of the regulations were brought before the minister and the Raad, sitting together.

Re-examined by Mr. Burton: The members of the Raad were chosen by the people subject to the approval of the minister.

Mrs. Elizabeth Kling, wife of the Rev. Mr. Kling, said that between 1889 and 1894, she lived at Saron with her husband. She recollected John Barron coming to sign a contract in connection with a certain erf. She witnessed his signature to a document (produced). She remembered Leander coming to see Mr. Kling, and threatening him.

The Rev. Jacob Weeber, of Stellenbosch, said he was a missionary of the Rhenish Society, and had been in the Colony for 23 years. He first went to Saron shortly after his arrival in the Colony, and had ever since had an intimate acquaintance with the place. He remembered seeing printed copies of the Gemeenewetten in the early days. He had never seen any other written or printed set of Congregational laws. He had never heard any objection to the printed rules. There were two raads at the mission—the Kerk Raad and the Gemeente Raad. The former were elected by themselves—they added to their number. The latter were nominated by the minister. In 1893 a meeting was held in order to revise the regulations so as to make them uniform. There were about thirty people present, and draft regulations, drawn up by witness, were submitted to the meeting. These did not contain any material alterations of the existing regulations; they only made the old laws clearer. Two of the people who signed these regulations afterwards came to Worcester and objected to a clause dealing with compensation. This clause was then altered and the visitors went away professing to be satisfied. Some 200 of the inhabitants had agreed to accept the new regulations, and the new regulations were applied to these. In the cases of the other the old regulations were applied.

Mr. Burton: What do you say is the cause of the disturbance there?

Witness: Well, my personal impression is that it is the so-called Ethiopian movement. These people had no right to come there, but they have started a church in opposition to ours.

[Maasdorp, J.: On your ground?]

Witness: Yes.

[Maasdorp, J.: And without your permission?]

Yes.

[Maasdorp, J.: They are erf-holders?]

Some of them are, but others have no right there.

[Maasdorp, J.: But could not you give them a month's notice?]

That is what we hold. That is what we have come to Court for.

Other witnesses gave evidence of a similar character.

The Rev. Mr. Harborg, in cross-examination by Mr. Alexander, stated that there was an impression among some of the people that rent was not to be paid after a number of years.

A member of the congregation identified a copy of the printed rules that had been read out from time to time. Evidence was given as to the value of the property, and Mr. Burton closed his case for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Alexander called Titus Valentine, and asked leave to have him accommodated with a chair on account of his age.

[Maasdorp, J.: What is his age?]

Mr. Alexander: Ninety-seven, my lord.

[Maasdorp, J.: Are you going back as far as that?]

Mr. Alexander: Yes, my lord.

The witness stated he had worked on the farm before it was purchased by the Mission Society. He remembered Mr. Kulpman sending round the circular. Witness went to see him, and Mr. Kulpman said he let witness have the erven at £1 16s. per year. Mr. Kulpman said the lease would be for witness's lifetime, and when he died it was to go to his children and his children's children. Witness and many others signed their names in the book. Mr. Kulpman read from the book, showing how the tenants were to behave themselves. The wages that witness and the others received for erecting the church and schools were 6d. and 9d. a day, the mission explaining that the church would stand for the workers and their children. Witness had been living there for 16 years at 3s. a month. Until Mr. Kling went to Germany everything was quiet at Sarron.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He knew that the society would not turn a man away, except he did something deliberately wrong. The book was in the pulpit, and from that the Rev. Kulpman read the conditions of the tenancy.

The next witness was 76 years of age, and he stated that he went to Sarron about three months after Mr. Kulpman's time. Mr. Kulpman said witness could have the land on payment of 3s. a month. Mr. Kulpman told witness he could have the place, and that it would become his property when it was paid for. The cause of the unrest at Sarron was the action of Mr. Kling in making the people sign the new contract.

Andreas Vermuelen, 72 years of age, stated he went to Saron in response to a notice issued by Mr. Kulpman. The notice stated that Mr. Kulpman was going to start a school farm.

Further evidence was given as to the contract.

Johanna Huys (widow, aged 73 years) said that she went from Stellenbosch to Saron in 1847 to assist in the school as a teacher. Some time afterwards she left for Stellenbosch, but upon her marriage she returned to Saron, and had since been living there. She was aware of the conditions that were made with those who went to live at Saron. Mr. Kuepman told them that when Saron was paid for it would become their own property.

Maasdorp, J., pointed out to counsel that this was not a question of ancient rights, but a question of contract.

Witness (continuing) said that the arrangement was that they should get one piece of land, and if they got half a muid of seed, they had to give a muid of corn to the Leerar. They had to keep the water furrow clear at their own expense. There were other regulations to the effect that there should be no theft, no drinking, no murder, and so forth at the station. It was understood that if a man did nothing against the regulations he could not be sent away.

Frederick Franz, a former member of the Raad at Saron, said that in January, 1903, they were informed that the inspector from Germany wanted to make a new contract, and that the place could not exist any longer as it had done. He said that if they refused to sign the contract, he had authority to sell the place. They went out to consult, and they came to the conclusion that unless certain rules were removed from the contract they would not sign.

Solomon Franz, also of Saron, said that he obtained his erf from his father-in-law, and subsequently he was allotted another erf. He had a shop at Saron during Mr. Weeber's time. He gave notice to Mr. Weeber. Witness used to be one of the churchwardens. Questions concerning the general welfare used to come before the Raad. Certain small cases of breaches of the regulations were dealt with by the Raad, but more serious cases went to the Magistrate's Court. At the second meeting, at which the new conditions were to be considered, it was found that one alteration had been made in regard to the rate on the land now. It had cost witness £150 to put up his house.

The defendant, Goedeman, caused a good deal of amusement by his replies, in cross-examination, to Mr. Burton. Goedeman repeatedly stated that he had told all he knew, and he could not say anything more without "telling lies." In reference to his non-attendance at church, he admitted that he was not intending permanently to stay away, and that he might yet return if he remained at Saron.

Several other witnesses, coloured men living at the station, were called for the defence.

Johannes Vlotmans said that papers were taken round Saron to pay the rent of erfs. The papers were given to the members of the congregation, who were in arrear.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He did not know the laws of the congregation. He heard of them, but he did not carry them about with him.

Johannes Moller, auctioneer, said he valued each plot of land at £10. He thought that £60 would be a very fair valuation for Muller's house. Baron's house he valued at £40, and his plot at £4.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: He did not measure the ground; he stepped it out in his usual way.

This closed the case for the defendants.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

[Maasdorp, J.: In this case, the plaintiff in his capacity as trustee of the missionary society, sues five of the tenants of the society in order to obtain a declaration of rights, and also an order of ejectment of the defendants from the premises. It appears that the main question at issue between the parties in the different cases is so identical that it was considered advisable to consolidate the six cases, in order to save costs and time. The questions so raised, as I say, are in the main identical in all the cases, though there are some slight variations, which I shall have to refer to when it becomes necessary to make the orders for each particular case. It appears that the Rhenish Mission Society, which has its principal seat in Germany, determined some long time ago to establish the mission station in the neighbourhood of Tulbagh, for the amelioration of the condition of the coloured people in the neighbouring districts, and also for their religious instruction. In order to carry out their object they thought it advisable to set about establishing a village, in which the people could live in the neighbourhood of a church, which it was proposed to build out of the funds of the society, and also for the assistance of prospective inhabitants of the land. The inducements held out to the coloured people were the offer of an erf or plot of ground for them to occupy, upon which they had the right to build and have a garden and other cultivation for their own benefit. The rent which was charged was not very high. The inducements served their purpose, because a large number of the coloured people flocked to the place, and the village of Saron was ultimately established. After these people came to take up their erf even they entered into an agreement with the Rhenish Mission Society as to what the conditions were upon which the ground was occupied. When the village was started is not really at issue in the present case, because the contracts with which the Court has specifically to deal were only made in the year 1881, and the others were made subsequently. For the special purposes of this case it will only be necessary to ascertain what were the conditions upon which the five defendants entered into the other contracts. But a wider question has been raised, and it has been suggested that really these are test cases, and there is a wish on the part of the plaintiffs and the residents in this village to ascertain what are the conditions upon which the persons held their tenancies fixed at a date prior to the earliest contract here mentioned. A large number of witnesses were called, and, perhaps, it was necessary in this case to ascertain what the conditions were, as, in respect of four of these contracts, they are not set forth expressly in writing. I may mention in the case of one of the defendants the expressed conditions upon which he holds is contained in his contract. That is the case of Barron, which will be decided under the contract. Then there is the contract by Muller, in which certain conditions are referred to. It is necessary in his case and the three other cases to ascertain what terms the parties entered upon their tenancies. It is quite clear that since 1876 there have been printed conditions of contract in existence, and also printed rules of the society for the management of this village that came into existence about 1876 or 1877. Now, the question is when the contracts were entered into between these defendants and the society, were these printed conditions the terms upon which the contracts were made or were there others which the parties had in contemplation. I do not intend to go any length into this part of the case. I am satisfied if these printed conditions were in existence, it is impossible to understand why the parties should have entered into the agreement under any other conditions than those printed. It may be said it was the intention of the society to act upon these rules, but it does not follow it was the intention of those who entered into the agreement with them to do so. The suggestion is that these parties contemplated some other rules. As far as the defendants are concerned, I am satisfied that these rules were generally known, that the contract was entered into upon rules generally known, and that they became the terms of the contract between the parties. It is said there were other rules previously in existence, and the tenants had them in contemplation when they entered into their contracts. The evidence of the missionaries shows that the rules in the book are substantially the same as the present rules, and I am satisfied also on the evidence of the defendants, they are the same rules of the contract. The main difference is upon this point. Had the society the power under the agreement to eject a tenant upon giving a month's notice? That condition appears in the printed rules, and I am satisfied when a tenancy is entered into that the first thing the parties would consider is the manner in which the contract should be terminated. The defendants say that there was a stipulation in the agreement made to the effect that they should not be ejected as long as they behaved themselves, and that the properties should pass to their legal successors. I feel satisfied that some assurance was given when the contracts were being made upon the fixed conditions, among others, a month's notice, that they would not be disturbed, and that their children would take over after them, and I think the assurances have been faithfully observed by the society, because we have no case in which a man, who has behaved himself, has not been able to get his property passed on to his relatives. I am of opinion that one of the terms of the contract was one month's notice to the tenants to quit. Three received notice to quit, and in my opinion that notice was sufficient. One starts a butchery business against the rules of the society, another used threatening language, and the third refused to attend the services of the church, and then he further breaks the rules by ploughing lands without doing it under the directions which he is bound to accept of the missionary in charge. As to the other two, notice to quit was not given, but I find it is one of the conditions that a tenant shall be allowed to remain upon the property, but he must have paid his rent by the end of the year, and that condition has not been observed by these two defendants, not only so, but they have set up a sort of proprietary right themselves. There are no proprietary rights in this case, and they have no rights except such as given them by the contract. Upon that point I give a general declaration that the contracts made by the defendants in this case are subject to the printed rules, a copy of which has been put in. The plaintiff society is therefore entitled to an order of ejectment. The plaintiffs are prepared, according to the rule, to make compensation to those who have made improvements upon their property. They are willing to make such compensation, and the question is as to the special order in respect of compensation in the case of Barron. The scale of maximum compensation is laid down, and, consequently, the Court will give judgment in his case that he is to quit the premises upon payment to him of £25. Of course, that payment is subject to any set-off which the society may have in respect of anything due to them as a matter of costs or otherwise. If there should be a claim of costs against him, that, of course, will be set off. As far as the other four defendants are concerned, there is such a large margin between the value given by the witnesses for the plaintiffs and the defendants that I cannot safely act upon the evidence. The plaintiff has offered to pay such compensation as may be awarded as the result of any direction the Court may give, and I am of opinion that some disinterested person should be appointed to make the valuations. He is to value not only the house, but also other permanent improvements upon the erven, which go to enhance their value. That is, he is to consider what an erf would be worth without the improvements, and what it is worth with the improvements, and the defendants will be entitled to payment of the value so ascertained. The defendants will be ordered to leave the premises by the 31st December, and Mr. J. W. H. Meiring, of Worcester, appointed to value the improvements, which will be paid to the defendants, the defendants to pay the costs of the suit. Goedeman, Muller, Engelbrech, and Leander to pay the rent due by them.

Mr. Burton asked that the ejectment be ordered to take place before Christmas.

[Maasdorp, J.: Christmas is a time of peace, and good results may follow from their being there.]

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

CAPE TOWN RATEPAYERS' ASSOCIATION AND OTHERS } 1905.
V. CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL. } Nov. 17th.

Town Council—Contract—Interdict.

The Court granted a rule nisi on the ex parte application of certain councillors and other ratepayers, calling upon the Town Council of C. T. to show cause why they should not be restrained from entering into a certain contract.

This was an application for a rule nisi against the Town Council of Cape Town by the Cape Town Ratepayers' Association and Venning Thomas and Van Blerck, president and secretary respectively of the association, and Hyman Liberman (Mayor) and Councillors Abdurahman, Alexander, Friedlander, Harris, Jones, and Forsyth, representing the ratable property of the value of over £3,000,000.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: It seems to be a house divided.]

Sir H. Juta: Yes, very much so.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Is the application ex parte?]

Yes.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Notice should have been given.]

Sir H. Juta explained that the matter had been hurriedly prepared.

The petition set out at length the proceedings leading up to the present application. Petitioners, inter alia, called attention to the notice of motion given by Dr. Abdurahman, and went on to say:

16. That this notice of motion was accepted by the Mayor as staying all proceedings in connection with the acceptance of the said tender of Nuttall and Co. until the next Council meeting on October 12.

17. That, nevertheless, in direct opposition to the effect of this motion and without either the knowledge or the authority of the Mayor or of the Council, the Town Clerk on the following day wrote to Messrs. Nuttall and Co. accepting their tender, and that his letter was as follows:

28th September, 1905.

Gentlemen,—I am instructed to inform you that the Council have decided to accept your tender for the paving of Darling, Adderley, St. George's, Parliament, Plein, and Long streets with the Hastings paving-block, at the schedule prices contained in your tender. A contract is now being drafted to give effect to the arrangement proposed, and will be submitted to you for signature in due course. In the meantime, will you be good enough to furnish me with parcel of £10,000 of Cape Town Municipal Stock, in accordance with the terms of your contract.—I am, etc.,

J. R. FINCH.

The petitioners proceeded to refer to subsequent developments, and went on:

35. That during the course of this week a report upon the probable cost of this contract has been obtained from the city treasurer in conjunction with the City Engineer, and that the probable cost has been placed by them at £100,000.

36. That certain of your petitioners are aware of their own knowledge that the "extras" in similar contracts with the said and with other firms has varied from 10 per cent. to 50 per cent. of the original tender, and that they are of opinion that the extras in the present case will show a very high proportion to the original tender.

37. That your petitioners of the first part strongly oppose the signing of this contract on the ground that a poll of the ratepayers having been demanded on the question of paving, it is necessary to apply to the ratepayers to sanction the expenditure of further funds in excess of what was actually granted by the ratepayers.

38. That your petitioners of the second part are equally opposed to the signing of the contract in question both on the ground above mentioned, and also on the ground that if any such contract be entered into they, as Councillors, will be rendered personally liable for the difference between the amount of the available funds sanctioned by the ratepayers and the ultimate cost of the said contract.

39. That petitioners further oppose the said contract on the ground that the paving material tendered for by Nuttall and Co., viz: 'The Patent Hastings Sanitary Block,' cannot be supplied by the said firm of Nuttall and Co., and that the facts in connection therewith are as follows:

40. That on or about the 31st of October the Mayor, in consequence, of information received from the United States, requested an interview with Nuttall and Co.'s manager in reference to their tender.

41. That at the said interview Mr. Trimmer, the manager of Nuttall and Co. admitted that his firm did not and had no right to represent the Hastings Sanitary Paving Block Co. in South Africa, thus bearing out the information received by the Mayor to the effect that no company in South Africa had the right to represent the Hastings Sanitary Paving Block Company.

42. That the Mayor thereupon caused a letter to be sent to the said firm of Nuttall and Co. in the following terms:

1st November, 1905.

In re Hastings Sanitary Paving Block.

Gentlemen,—His Worship the Mayor desires me to refer to the interview which he had with your Mr. Trimmer yesterday, with regard to the tender for the paving of certain streets of the city with the Hastings Sanitary Paving Block, and to state that His Worship understands that the firm of Edmund Nuttall and Co. do not represent the Hastings Sanitary Paving Block Co., in South Africa, and, further, that they hold no authority from such company

His Worship desires me to ask that you will be good enough to confirm this in writing.—I am, etc.,

J. R. FINCH.

E. Nuttall and Co., P.O. Box 1,597, Cape Town.

43. That the foregoing letter was sent on 1st November but that no reply or acknowledgment was received until 8th November, one week later, when the following communication appeared:

P.O. Box 1,597, Cape Town, November 7, 1905.

The Town Clerk, City Hall, Cape Town.

Sanitary Block Paving Contract.

Dear Sir,—We are in receipt of your letter of 1st instant, in which you refer to an interview between His Worship the Mayor and our Mr. Trimmer, and in which you ask us to confirm certain things. We have to remark that the interview was stated by His Worship the Mayor to be entirely informal, he prefacing his questions with the remark, that he was inquiring for his own information. Mr. Trimmer was given no idea of the purpose of the interview previous to it, and had no opportunity of consulting any papers, or refreshing his memory in any way, and, consequently, we cannot be held to anything that transpired. We beg, however, for the information of the Mayor and Councillors to advise you that we have communicated by cable with our head office, and have received confirmation of the facts, mainly as stated at the interview in question. We have to inform you that the paving material for which we have tendered is what is known in some places as the "Hastings Sanitary Block," and in others as the "Sanitary Block Paving." The original proprietors of this material are the International Paving Company of Hartford, Connecticut, U.S.A. They are the parent company, and issue all licences. They have granted to the Hastings Company rights to manufacture blocks only, and the Hastings Co., consequently, could not give any authority to us. The parent company have granted rights to manufacture and to issue licences to manufacture to the Sanitary Block and Tile Company, Ltd., of London, which rights are for the United Kingdom, South Africa, Egypt, and India. We have acquired from the London Company their rights for Cape Colony, the Orange River Colony, and the Transvaal. When we first submitted samples of the sanitary block to the City Engineer in October, 1904, we were (in the absence of documents) under the impression that the parent company and the Hastings Company were one and the same, and we used the word "Hastings" when under this impression. We have since become aware of the facts set out above, and we append a copy of the preamble of our agreement, which shows clearly that we hold our rights from the parent company and the London company. The London company having the rights in South Africa, it is clear that the Hastings Company could not have anything to do with Cape Town in any way. That the block we propose to supply is identical with the Hastings block is clearly proved by the facts that the International Company's testing laboratories are situated in the Hastings works, that the whole of our experiments and the designs of our plant have been under the advice of the Hastings Company, and that we have contracted with the Hastings Company for the supply of flux and for the necessary press plant. We append a copy of the cable received from our head office for your information. We beg to state that, as this question has been raised, we must ask that the whole of this statement be communicated to the Council.—We are, dear sir, yours faithfully.

Per pro Edmund Nuttall and Co.

(Signed) A. K. TRIMMER.

44. Petitioners beg leave to specially point out to the Court that the heading of Nuttall and Co.'s reply excludes the word "Hastings" and the word "Patent," whereas the tender and accompanying documents includes both; that, as indicated in the second paragraph of this letter, the company attempt to resile from the position taken up, and the conversation held by their representative at the interview with the Mayor on 31st October; and that in the sixth paragraph they state that "the block we propose to supply is identical with the Hastings block," etc., thereby admitting that the block to be supplied by them is not the Hastings Sanitary Block itself, but merely a colourable imitation, or something "just as good."

45. That the said Nuttall and Co., in the tender submitted by them, distinctly undertake to supply the Hastings Sanitary Block, and that they append to the said tender a "statement of claims to consideration" in favour of the said "Hastings Sanitary Block," in which is set forth the extent to which the said "Hastings Sanitary Block" is used in various cities and towns of the world.

46. That the said Hastings Sanitary Block paving (otherwise termed the Patent Hastings Sanitary Block paving) is a specific and patented article, and is apparently well known.

47. That a sample of this block was deposited with the Town Clerk, in whose possession it at present lies.

48. That petitioners have been unable to obtain copies of the original tender by Nuttall, together with the "statement of claims of consideration," and a letter from Nuttall and Co. which accompanied their tender, and that, accordingly, they are not in a position to particularly set before the Court certain material discrepancies therein, and that your petitioners beg leave to refer the Court to the accompanying affidavit by their attorney herein.

49. That the original resolution of 10th August, 1905, accepting the recommendation of the Public Works and Improvements Committee was adopted under certain representations which it now appears cannot be carried out, viz.: (1) That there were sufficient funds to proceed with the work, and (2) that Nuttall and Co. intended to provide the "Hastings Sanitary Block," and that they possessed the right to do so.

50. That your petitioners desire to point out that the said committee in the course of their report recommending the adoption of Nuttall and Co.'s tender, state that they "unanimously concur in the opinion of the City Engineer," which was that the most suitable tender was that for the Hastings Sanitary Block, whereas in point of fact the said committee were not unanimous—Councillor Bartlett stating that he had voted under a misapprehension, and the Mayor and Councillor Matthews (who were against the recommendation) having been absent.

51. That during the course of the present week communications have been received from the Hastings Paving Company of New York forwarding a sample block together with a quotation, or tender, to be submitted to the Town Council, and that the Hastings Paving Company, from whom the sample block has been received, is the same company of whom Nuttall and Co. allege that they hold the sole agency in South Africa.

52. That your petitioners annex hereto a copy of the specification, and form of tender for the contract under question, and also a copy of the contract which awaits signature.

53. That paragraph 19 of the conditions in the said specification and form of tender sets forth that the contractor is to maintain, uphold, and guarantee the stability of the works "for a certain period after completion, and that paragraph (c) under the heading "Tenders are Invited For"—on page 6 of the specification provides that the tenderer shall state the price at which he will be prepared to maintain the paving after the expiration of the period of guarantee.

54. That according to clause 5 of the Draft Contract the tenderers undertake merely to maintain the paving for three years, and that your petitioners hold that the tender binds the said Nuttall and Co. to guarantee the paving for a certain term, and thereafter to maintain the same either free of charge or at a certain cost.

55. That in support of this statement petitioners desire to refer the Court to the clause occurring in the report of the Public Works and Improvement Committee, which report is embodied in paragraph 6 hereof, and which clause is as follows: "Messrs. Nuttall and Co. are willing after the period of maintenance has expired to guarantee the paving for a period of three years without charge."

56. That your petitioners hold that by "guaranteeing the paving" a successful tenderer undertakes to refund the whole price, and monies received by him if the paving should prove unsatisfactory.

57. That in view of the great and unabated interest taken by the ratepayers of Cape Town and by the public at large in the matter of the paving of the streets of the city, in tenders received for the same, in the debates in the Town Council as to the whole matter, and as to the acceptance of Nuttall and Co.'s contract; in view of the great difference of opinion among Councillors themselves, taking into consideration the fact that throughout the voting hereon in the Council has been so close and that on certain occasions the party against the acceptance of this tender have had a majority in actual votes; and, lastly, in view of the fact that the election held (under statutory rules), on September 11 last, turned entirely on this question of the paving contract, and that in the result four Councillors out of the six returned expressed themselves during the election as strongly against the acceptance of any tender until sample strips of all proposed paving had been laid by way of experiment, and in view of the fact that a poll has been repeatedly demanded. Your petitioners having taken all these matters into consideration, are of opinion that the only satisfactory method of elucidating the matter is to approach the ratepayers by way of taking a poll in the same manner as is done in the case of loans.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that your lordship may be pleased:

1. To issue a rule nisi calling on respondents to show cause by December 12 next (a) Why respondents should not be interdicted from signing the said contract; (b) why respondents should not be ordered to take a poll of the ratepayers as to the paving of the streets; (c) why the respondents should not be restrained from signing the said contract on the ground that the necessary money therefor has not been authorised by the ratepayers; (d) why respondents should not be restrained from signing the said contract on the ground that the terms thereof differ materially from the tender and conditions; (e) for the costs of this application.

Counsel also read an affidavit by Mr. A. J. MacCallum, attorney to the applicants, in reference to communications he had had with the Town Clerk in regard to the inspection of certain documents, Sir H. Juta, K.C., for applicants.

Buchanan, A.C.J., observed that the government of the City remained in the City Council, and it was not for this Court to decide its management.

Sir H. Juta said that the question was not one of management.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Your first application is that a poll of the ratepayers should be ordered to take place. Are you entitled to that?]

Yes; because the necessary amount of money is not there.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: But that is under a different clause.]

We cannot demand that a poll of the ratepayers should be taken as to whether or not there should be this paving of the streets.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Then that falls away. Then there is paragraph (c): "Why respondents should not be restrained from signing the said contract on the ground that the necessary money therefor has not been authorised by the ratepayers." That, you say, you are entitled to ask for?]

Sir H. Juta said that that was so.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Then, there is paragraph (d): "Why respondents should not be restrained from signing the contract on the ground that the terms differ materially from the tender and conditions." That is not a matter for the Court to interfere with, but a matter of management.]

I submit that is a matter on which the Court could very well interfere. The Council is a public body authorised to do certain things. Counsel went on to say that he admitted that he could not support the demand for a poll of the ratepayers as to the paving of the streets, because he did not see any authority for it. The way, however, to look at the matter was this, that if the ratepayers did not agree to this paving they would agree to a loan. The first point was that the money was not there, and that it would be necessary, taking the estimate of the City Treasurer, in conjunction with the City Engineer, at £100,000, to make an application under the Act for a loan, and the only way in which a loan could be granted was by going to the ratepayers. The danger was that if the Mayor did not sign the contract somebody else must sign it. These Councillors and the Mayor, who were the persons to settle whether the money should be raised or not, wished that the contract should not be signed until they had had an opportunity of deciding whether they would grant the money or not. On what ground—

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: The only ground.]

Sir H. Juta: Well, take the next ground, my lord. A public body invites tenders, and a tender is sent in and it is accepted. It is now proposed by a majority of that public body that a contract materially differing from that accepted tender shall be entered into.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Surely they have the power to make any alteration they may have agreed upon. If the Council choose to alter a contract, surely they can do so?]

Sir H. Juta submitted that they could not do so without calling for fresh tenders. Surely a public body which was authorised to call for tenders could not, after it had accepted one tender on certain conditions, then go and alter these conditions? A mere majority of the Council could, then, under those circumstances, make what contract they liked.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Of course they can; they can alter the conditions of the tenders as much as they like.]

Notwithstanding that they have called for tenders under certain conditions?

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Surely they have the power to do that? That is a matter of administration for the Council. The Council acts through the majority; you cannot get a large body to agree unanimously to anything.]

But then it must act in a proper manner, and that proper manner is that, where the Council, qua Council, has accepted a certain tender, which has been submitted—

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: Of course, as this is an ex parte application, I don't wish to say anything as to the merits of the matter, but I wish you to show me prima facie grounds]

Sir H. Juta: I submit that the first ground is sufficient in itself. I rely on the second point as to the money, because there is no resolution of the Council to the effect that the original tender should be in any way modified. Your lordship says that the Town Council has the right to make any modifications it likes in regard to this contract. Then, my lord, as I said, it must be done in a proper manner, and the Town Council must then, as a Town Council, pass a resolution that they will agree that Nuttall and Co. should amend the original tender in certain particulars. My point to your lordship is that no such resolution has been passed by the Council, and that there is absolutely nothing passed by the Council in any way altering or amending Messrs. Nuttall and Co.'s original tender. Our point is that the contract, as drafted, differs materially from the tender. First of all there is maintenance, and there is a guarantee for two periods. The contract only deals with one period. Sir Henry went on to contend that the Town Council could not enter into a contract which differed from the original tender without a proper resolution of the Council to that effect. The contract, as drafted, did not embody the tender, and it was much more favourable to Messrs. Nuttall than the tender was,

been allowed to come and live upon the said property without binding himself either verbally or in writing to pay a certain monthly rental for the ground occupied by him, and to observe strictly all the said rules (Gemeentewetten) for the time being in force as made by the society for the good of the residents.

The declaration in respect of the defendant Barron proceeded:

5. Amongst the persons so allowed to reside upon the said property was defendant, who, on or about April 16, 1900, was granted the occupation as a tenant at a rental of 1s. 6d. a month of a certain half-erf thereon in terms of a written agreement, whereby he bound himself, as a condition of his said occupation faithfully to observe the said "Gemeentewetten" on pain of forfeiting his privilege of residing at Saron aforesaid, and the defendant has continued since then to occupy the said half-erf upon the said terms, and has paid the said rent up to the end of the year 1904.

6. By rule 5 of the said "Gemeentewetten" the occupation of said half-erf by the defendant could be determined by a month's previous notice on either side.

7. By rule 6 thereof it was provided that "buildings which a lessee has erected on an erf may, when he receives notice to quit, be pulled down by him or he may sell them, at the valuation of the directors to the Rhenish Society." It was further provided, by an additional rule agreed to and signed by the defendant, that the highest sum which should be paid for a house in case a resident of Saron transgressed the rules and had to quit, the place should not exceed £25.

8. By rule 15 it is provided that no person may establish a butchery without the permission of the said "Leeraar" (minister).

9. By rule 21 it is provided that anyone who will not obey the rules of the institution must leave the place.

10. In or about November, 1904, the defendant, in direct opposition to and in defiance of the said rules, wrongfully and without the permission of the minister, opened a butchery, upon the half-erf occupied by him as aforesaid, and, in spite of repeated warnings and protests addressed to him by the minister, has refused to close the said butchery and continues to contravene the said rules in the above respect.

11. On or about April 26, 1905, the plaintiff, as he lawfully might, duly gave the defendant notice to quit the said estate within a month's time at the same time tendering to compensate him for his house in terms of the said agreement, but the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully refused, and still refuses, to regard the said notice or to quit the said estate, and claims that the said half-erf is his own property.

12. The said house of the defendant is valued by the plaintiff at £20, and the plaintiff is willing, and tenders upon the defendant quitting the said estate, to allow him to break down and remove from the said estate the said building, and any other buildings or improvements he may have acquired or built or made thereon, or in the alternative to pay him the said sum of £20, or the value of the said house, and of any other structures or improvements as aforesaid as may be assessed in terms of the said agreement or as may be fixed by an independent party or parties, or as may be decreed by this Honourable Court.

The plaintiff tendering as aforesaid, claims: (a) A declaration of rights as between himself and the defendant in respect of the defendant's said occupation in the premises; (b) a declaration that the said half-erf is the property of the said society, and that the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendant therefrom and from the said estate of Saron either upon the defendant's refusal to be bound by or to obey any of the said rules or upon due notice given to him thereunder, upon payment of compensation as above tendered; (c) an order ejecting the defendant with his family and belongings from the said half-erf and from the said estate of Saron; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit.

The declaration in respect of the defendant, Jury Muller, proceeded:

5. Amongst the persons so allowed to reside upon the said property was the defendant, who, on or about September 5, 1896, was granted the occupation as a tenant of a certain erf at a rental of 3s. per month in terms of a written agreement, whereby he was given the said occupation for such time as he observed the said rules and paid his rent at the stipulated time, and the defendant has continued since then to occupy the said erf upon the said terms (save that since 1901 the said rent has been reduced to 2s. 3d. a month), and has paid the rent thereunder up to the end of the year 1903.

6. By rule 21 of the said "Gemeentewetten" anyone who will not obey the laws of the institution is obliged to leave the place.

7. By rule 19 every lessee must have paid his rent by the end of the year. The defendant has contravened the said rule by failing to pay any rent since the end of the year 1903. There is still due and unpaid by him to the plaintiff the rent in respect of the said erf for the year 1904, to wit, the sum of £1 7s.

8. The plaintiff has demanded payment of the said sum from the defendant, who however refuses to pay the same, and claims that he and his heirs are entitled to the use and occupation of the said erf in perpetuity without payment of any rent to the plaintiff.

9. By rule 6 of the said "Gemeentewetten" it is provided that buildings which a lessee has erected on an erf may, in case he receives notice to discontinue the lease, be pulled down by him, or he may sell them according to the estimate of the directors to the Rhenish Society.

The plaintiff claims: (a) A declaration of rights as between himself and the defendant, in respect of the defendant's said occupation in the premises; (b) a declaration that the said erf is the property of the said society, and that the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendant therefrom, and from the said estate of Saron upon the defendant's refusal to be bound by or to obey any of the said rules, and that the defendant's occupation of the said erf is limited by the terms of his said agreement and his observance of the said rules, including the rule as to payment of rent; (c) payment of the sum of £1 7s. as rent aforesaid; (d) an order ejecting the defendant, with his family and belongings, from the said erf and from the said estate of Saron, by reason of the defendant's contravention of the said rule respecting the payment of rent, the plaintiff tendering to allow the defendant to break down and remove from the said estate any buildings or other improvements he may have acquired, built, or made thereon, or in the alternative to pay him the value of such buildings and improvements as may be assessed under the said rules or as may be fixed by an independent party or parties, or as may be decreed by this Honourable Court; (e) alternative relief; (f) costs of suit.

The declaration in respect of the defendant Goedeman proceeded:

5. Amongst the persons so allowed to reside upon the property was the defendant, who, in or about 1881, was granted the occupation as a tenant of a certain erf thereon at a monthly rental of 3s., upon condition that he obeyed the said rules, and the defendant has continued since then to occupy the said erf upon the said terms and has paid the rent thereunder up to the end of the year 1903.

6. By Rule 21 of the said "Gemeentewetten" anyone who will not obey the laws of the institution is obliged to leave the place.

7. By Rule 11 thereof it was provided that every inhabitant of the institution must attend the religious services on Sunday as well as in the week regularly. The defendant has contravened the said rule in that during the last twelve months he has wholly failed to attend the said services.

8. By Rule 19 every lessee must have paid his rent by the end of the year. The defendant has contravened the said rule in that he has neglected to pay his rent, namely, the said sum of £1 16s. due at the end of 1904, and the said sum is still due and unpaid. The defendant, moreover, claims that he is not bound to pay any rent whatsoever in respect of his occupation of the said erf, and has incited certain of the other tenants of the said society to refrain from paying their rent.

9. By Rule 3 the lessee of an erf may, with the permission of the "Leer-aar" (minister), have the use of certain sowing land for which a small rental is to be paid. The defendant has contravened the said rule by entering upon and cultivating in the years 1903, 1904, and 1905, certain sowing land on the said estate without the permission of the said minister, and he has continued to cultivate the said land without such permission, and in spite of repeated warnings, and remonstrances addressed to him by or on behalf of the minister, and has refused, and still refuses, to pay any rental therefor.

10. By Rule 5 of the said "Gemeentewetten" the occupation of the said erf by the defendant could be determined by a month's notice on either side.

11. By Rule 6 it was provided that buildings which a lessee has erected on an erf may, in case he receives notice to discontinue the lease, be pulled down by him, or he may sell them, according to the estimate of the directors to the Rhenish Society.

12. On or about the 26th of May, 1905, the plaintiff, as he lawfully might, gave the defendant notice to quit the said erf and the said estate generally by the 1st of July, 1905, the plaintiff at the same time tendering to pay the value of a house erected on the said erf as ascertained in terms of the said rules or by arbitration or to allow the defendant to break down and remove the material thereof, but the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully refused, and still refuses, to regard the said notice or to quit the said erf and estate.

13. In addition to the said house, which is valued by the plaintiff at about £35, the defendant has also an interest by virtue of his marriage in community to his wife, Elizabeth Goedeman, in half of another erf occupied in the name of one Eva Balie, and the plaintiff is willing and tenders, upon the defendant quitting the said estate, to allow him to break down and remove therefrom the said house and any other structures or improvements he may have acquired or built or made thereon, or in the alternative to pay him the said sum of £35 and £1 the value of his interest in the other said erf or the value of the said house and of any other structures or improvements as aforesaid and of his interest in the other erf as may be assessed in terms of the said rules, or as may be fixed by an independent party or parties, or as may be decreed by this honourable Court.

The plaintiff, tendering as aforesaid, claims: (a) A declaration of rights as between himself and the defendant in respect of the defendant's said occupation in the premises; (b) a declaration that the said erf is the property of the said society, and that the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendant therefrom and from the said estate of Saron, either upon the defendant's refusal to be bound by or to obey any of the said rules, or upon due notice given to him thereunder, upon payment of compensation as above tendered; (c) Payment of the sum of £1 16s. as rent aforesaid; (d) the sum of £10 as damages sustained by reason of the defendant's wrongful cultivation of the said sowing land, his wrongful inciting of other tenants as aforesaid, and his contravention of the said rules in other respects; (e) an order ejecting the defendant, with his family and belongings, from the erf occupied by him and from the said estate of Saron; (f) alternative relief; (g) costs of suit.

The declaration in respect of the defendant Engelbrecht proceeded:

5. Among the persons so allowed to reside upon the said property was the defendant, who, in or about the month of May, 1887, was granted the occupation as a tenant of a certain erf thereon (being No. 241), at a rental of 3s. a month, on condition that he observed and was bound by the said rules, and the defendant has continued since then to occupy the said erf upon the said terms, and has paid the rent thereunder up to the end of the year 1903.

6. By Rule 21 of the said "Gemeentewetten," anyone who will not obey the laws of the institution is obliged to leave the place.

7. By Rule 19 thereof, every lessee must have paid his rent by the end of the year. The defendant has contravened the said rule by failing to pay any rent since the end of the year 1903. There is still due and unpaid by him to the plaintiff the rent in respect of the said erf for the twelve months to the end of the year 1904, to wit, the sum of £1 16s.

8. The plaintiff has demanded payment of the said sum from the defendant, who, however, refuses to pay the same, and claims that he and his heirs are entitled to the use and occupation of the said erf in perpetuity without payment of any rent to the plaintiff.

9. By Rule 6 of the said "Gemeentewetten," it is provided that buildings which a lessee has erected on an erf may, in case he receives notice to discontinue the lease, be pulled down by him or he may sell them, according to the estimate of the directors, to the Rhenish Society.

The plaintiff claims: (a) A declaration of rights as between himself and the defendant, in respect of the defendant's said occupation in the premises; (b) a declaration that the said

erf is the property of the said society, and that the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendant therefrom, and from the said estate of Saron, upon the defendant's refusal to be bound by or to obey any of the said rules, and that the defendant's occupation of the said erf is dependent and conditional upon his observance of the said rules, including the rule as to payment of rent; (c) payment of the sum of £1 16s. as rent aforesaid; (d) an order ejecting the defendant with his family and belongings from the said erf and from the said estate of Saron, by reason of the defendant's contravention of the said rule respecting the payment of rent, the plaintiff tendering to allow the defendant to break down and remove from the said estate any buildings or other improvements he may have acquired, built, or made thereon, or in the alternative to pay him the value of such buildings and improvements as may be assessed under the said rules, or as may be fixed by an independent party or parties, or as may be decreed by this Honourable Court; (e) alternative relief; (f) costs of suit.

The plea of the defendant Barron was as follows:

1. Defendant admits paragraphs 1 and 2 of plaintiff's declaration.

2. Defendant admits paragraph 3 thereof, but says that, according to the laws to which the contract between the parties is subject, and which are hereinafter referred to, the "Leeraar" is bound to act according to the advice of a Raad or Council to be chosen (according to the said laws) by the inhabitants every year. Defendant says, further, that the last election of members of the said Raad took place about three years ago.

3. Defendant admits paragraph 4, but says that the laws therein referred to were framed by one Rev. Mr. Kulpman for and on behalf of the Rhenish Mission Society, at the time when Saron was originally laid out as a town, and were contained in a certain book, which was kept in the possession of the duly authorised representative of the Rhenish Mission Society for the time being at Saron. The rules set out in paragraphs 6, 7, 8, and 9 of plaintiff's declaration did not form part of the said laws.

4. With regard to paragraph 5, defendant says that he was born at Saron, and that he has lived there from the time of his birth, and that he is living there at the present time. Defendant denies that he bound himself by any written agreement, or that he authorised any person to so bind him. Defendant admits that he became a tenant at the said rental, and says, further, that the rent of the said half-erf for the year 1905 is not yet due and payable. Defendant admits, further, that his tenancy was subject to certain laws, but says that these laws were those referred to in paragraph 3 hereof, and not those referred to in plaintiff's declaration.

5. With regard to paragraphs 6, 7, 8, and 9, defendant denies that the Rules 5, 6, 15, and 21 therein set forth formed part of the laws framed by Rev. Mr. Kulpman, and denies that he is bound by the said rules.

6. Defendant denies paragraph 10. He admits having opened a butchery at Saron in or about the month of November, 1904, but denies that he did so in direct opposition to and in defiance of the rules binding upon him. He says that the said butchery was opened with the full knowledge of the minister, who consented to the opening, and allowed defendant to complete all his preparations for such opening, but, he says further, that on the day before the opening the minister objected, all the preparations having in the meantime been completed. Defendant denies having been repeatedly warned by the minister to close the butchery, and denies that he has in any way contravened any of the rules binding upon him. Defendant says that, under the rules referred to in paragraph 3 hereof, the permission of the "Leeraar" was not necessary to enable him to establish a butchery, the said rules merely requiring notice to be given that the butchery was to be opened, which notice was duly given by defendant to the duly-authorised representative of the Rhenish Mission Society. Defendant says further that, save as hereinbefore set forth, the first notice received by him in connection with his having opened the butchery was given on or about the 26th of April, 1905, which notice was verbally repudiated by defendant.

7. With regard to paragraph 11, defendant admits having received the said notice, and admits that he refuses to regard the said notice or to quit the said estate. Defendant denies that his conduct in so doing is wrongful and unlawful, and defendant denies that he at any time claimed, or that he now claims, the said half-erf as his own property. Defendant maintains that he has faithfully carried out his part of the said contract, and that he is lawfully entitled to remain in undisturbed occupation of the said half-erf, in terms of the contract subsisting between the parties.

8. With regard to paragraph 12, defendant denies that £20 is a fair and reasonable valuation of his house and his other structures and improvements. Defendant further maintains that if this Honourable Court should decide that plaintiff is entitled to eject defendant (which defendant does not admit), defendant is lawfully entitled also to compensation for the loss of the grazing, planting, and other rights secured to him by the said laws referred to in paragraph 3 hereof.

9. Save as above, defendant denies all and singular the allegations in plaintiff's declaration contained.

As a claim in reconvention, the defendant alleges that, by virtue of the contract subsisting between the parties, defendant is entitled to remain in undisturbed occupation of the said half-erf, so long as he faithfully carries out the provisions of the said contract, and is entitled under the said laws to transfer his right to his children, or, failing children, to any of defendant's relations by affinity or consanguinity. Wherefore defendant claims: (a) A declaration of rights as between himself and plaintiff in respect of the said contract; (b) a declaration that plaintiff is not entitled to eject defendant from the said half-erf, so long as defendant carries out the provisions of the contract; (c) alternative relief; and (d) costs of suit.

The defendant Muller, in his plea, stated that he had never received occupation of the full extent of land leased, and claimed an abatement of the rent to the extent of £3 2s., in respect of such want of occupation. He said that he had tendered the rent for 1904, which plaintiff had refused to accept until he signed certain new conditions which he refused to do. He stated that he was prepared to leave Saron, although not legally bound to do so, upon payment of £200, in respect of building and improvements, and of grazing rights. In reconvention, he claimed the sum of £3 2s. in respect of the want of occupation of certain land included in the contract between the parties.

The defendant, Goedeman, in his plea, stated that he had tendered the rent for 1904, which the plaintiff refused to accept until he signed certain new conditions. He stated that he had been prevented from attending the society's church by the duly authorised representatives of the society, and had consequently been compelled to attend Divine service elsewhere. With regard to the sowing lands, he denied that such permission was necessary. He admitted that he had had the use of certain sowing land, and that under the said laws one-half of the quantity sowed had to be paid to the society's duly authorised representative, and said further that he had tendered the said one-half to Mr. Hartwig, the duly authorised representative of the society, but the said Mr. Hartwig refused to accept the same. With regard to paragraph 12, defendant admitted that he received the said notice, and that he refused to regard the said notice or to quit the said estate. He denied that his conduct in so doing was wrongful or unlawful. With regard to paragraph 13, defendant admitted that he had the said interest in half of another erf, but denied that £35 and £1 in this colony, and the respondent has never resided in this colony. The question of domicile will have to be fought out at the trial. You must not take it as settled by this case. It is quite possible that the Court may refuse your order. Leave to sue will be granted, citation to be returnable on the 1st February, personal service to be effected.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

Ex parte DE VILLIERS. { 1905.
Nov. 20th.

Mr. Van Zyl moved as a matter of urgency, on the petition of Rocco Catorzia de Villiers, for an order of ejectment against Wm. John Price from certain licensed house and premises in Main-street, Paarl, known as Freeman's Hotel. Petitioner said that he entered into a contract of lease with the respondent on the 23rd August last, and on the 1st September placed him in possession of the said house and premises. From that time till now Price had remained in undisturbed possession, but he had failed during the entire period to pay the rent due or any fraction thereof. The rent was £20 per month. Under clause 9 of the lease, if the lessee became two months in arrear with his rent, the lessor should have the right to terminate the lease and enter upon possession. Petitioner had been subjected to loss, damage, and inconvenience on account of the non-payment of the rent by the said Price, and had contracted to relet the said house and premises.

[Buchanan, A. J. C.: Where is the urgency?]

Mr. Van Zyl: A new contract has been entered into with another client, and applicant wishes to put the new lessee into possession, and it is impossible to get Price out of possession. The contract has been broken for some months.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: The set-down must not be interfered with by a plea of urgency, unless there be some urgency.]

Mr. Van Zyl: I can only say I was instructed by my client that there was some urgency.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: I do not see where the urgency arises. Unless there is urgency, these applications will not be heard. The petitioner has had plenty of time, and he might have put the matter down for the last motion day.]

Mr. Van Zyl: He is anxious to put the other lessee in possession by the 1st December. He did not move the Court before, because he wanted to give the present lessee some time.

[Buchanan, A. C. J.: Well, he could give the present lessee a little more time. There is no urgency in this matter. However, it will only be waste of time to go over the case again, and we will dispose of it now.]

Mr. Van Zyl (in answer to the Court) said that the prayer was for an ejectment, and to compel Price to act in terms of the said contract of lease.

Buchanan, A. C. J., granted an order directing respondent to give up possession of the premises, and to re-transfer the liquor licence within seven days from the service of the order of the Court.

MYBURGH V. DECKER. { 1905.
Nov. 20th.
" 21st.
" 22nd.

Servitus fluminis recipiendi.

Although a lower proprietor is bound to receive on his land such water as finds its way there from the land of an upper proprietor by natural flow: he is not bound to receive water which the upper proprietor has collected by artificial drainage at any point of his land at which the upper proprietor may elect to discharge it.

This was an action brought by Willem Hendrick Myburgh, tailor, Paarl, against Gustav Adolph Albert Decker, aerated water manufacturer and dealer, also of Paarl, for a declaration of rights as to the boundary line between their properties, for the restoration of three drainage furrows, and for damages.

Plaintiff, in his declaration, said that for a period far exceeding 30 years the southern portion of his property had been drained by a furrow running along the edge of the plaintiff's, and over that of the defendant's property. Recently the defendant had wrongfully and unlawfully, and without the consent of the plaintiff, closed up the furrow from a point marked "c" to "b," and constructed a deviation from "c" to "d." The eastern portion had likewise been drained for more than 30 years by similar furrows running over defendant's property, and marked "j" and "i g." These furrows had also been wrongfully and unlawfully closed by the defendant. By reason of the said acts, the southern and eastern portions of the plaintiff's property had been reduced to a state of stagnation and marsh, which rendered cultivation impossible. Plaintiff said that he had sustained damages in the sum of £100. Further, plaintiff said that the boundary between his and defendant's property on the southern side was a line running along the side of the said furrow marked "a" and "b," and that the plaintiff's property had been encroached upon by the defendant by constructing a fence running in a straight line from the point "a" to where it crossed the plaintiff's boundary at a point marked "k," two feet within the plaintiff's property. Plaintiff claimed a declaration of rights as to the true boundary line between his and defendant's property, an order that the defendant be required to reopen and restore the said furrows to their former states, £100 damages, alternative relief, and costs of suit.

Defendant, in his plea, admitted that a furrow ran along the northern boundary of the defendant's property, but denied that the southern and eastern portions of the plaintiff's property had been drained for a period of thirty years, as alleged. He denied that the plaintiff was entitled to the use of the said furrow to drain his property, either by right acquired as prescriptive user or right acquired in any other way. He said that in or about June, 1905, plaintiff or his servants or agents dug a trench from or about the point "f" over his (plaintiff's) property, with the object wrongfully and unlawfully of draining his land into his (defendant's) aforesaid furrow. In or about 1901 a certain person or persons wrongfully and unlawfully cut a trench at or about the spot marked "o" on the plan. Defendant admitted having closed up the furrow "o" to "b" and the furrow "i," and constructed the deviation, and said that he had acted lawfully and as of right. He said that the true boundary line was on the plaintiff's side of the fence referred to in paragraph 6 of the declaration. He further said that he and his predecessors-in-title had for 30 years and upwards occupied his (defendant's) property up to the said fence, and that he was entitled to such property up to such fence by reason of the fact that it was within the boundary line, as well as by prescriptive user. He prayed that the plaintiff's claim might be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Van Zyl (with him Mr. Gutsche) for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. W. P. Buchanan) for defendant.

Frederick Moller, surveyor, Paarl, gave evidence in support of the plaintiff's claim as to the correct boundary line between the parties, as, he considered, it was disclosed by a diagram of 1858.

John L. de Villiers, engineer, residing at the Paarl, stated he was engaged by plaintiff to take certain levels of the property, which was now in dispute. The plans (produced) were arranged by witness. Taking the property running from west to east (from the main street towards the river), it sloped in that direction.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Witness qualified in London and Birmingham.

The plaintiff stated the property in dispute was purchased by him in July, 1903. The furrow was then in existence, and there was a fence running alongside it. He did not live on the property. Last year he planted trees on the farm. When he began to do so, the defendant told him the ground was very wet for tree planting, and witness explained that it was through want of draining, and asked him to open the trench. Defendant refused to do so. Witness opened the furrow, and on going back found it closed. The closing up of the furrow had flooded his land, and had killed the trees that he had planted.

In cross-examination, witness said he had recently purchased the property next to the farm in question. There was another furrow on the farm, but it was no good. Witness denied having been told by the vendor of the property that it was impossible to cultivate the ground. Witness had seen a nice garden there six years ago.

R. Boyes, surveyor, having given evidence in reference to the 1858 diagram, Abraham Cornelius de Villiers, son of a former owner of plaintiff's ground, said that the furrow "a b" had been in existence as long as he could remember. The furrow used to be kept clean both by witness's father and the neighbouring owner. The properties could not do without the furrow. The entire length of the sluic from the street to the river was about 400 yards. At the part "h" and "i," the furrow was blocked, in consequence of Mr. Decker having planted willows. The furrows "i" and "ig" had been in existence over thirty years, up to the time of the estate being sold after his mother's death in 1902. He remembered having cleaned the furrows about six years ago. Up to 1902 neither Decker nor his predecessor-in-title Mostert disputed the right of witness's people to the use of the furrows. Witness had always regarded the middle of the sluic as the boundary between the properties. There was formerly a little wire fence nearer the sluic than the present fence, but it completely disappeared in 1902. At the present time plaintiff's ground was in such a marshy state that it was impossible to grow anything on it. "Formerly," said witness, "I had the grandest vegetables there and the prettiest flower garden in the whole of the Paarl. It is no moral use to attempt to grow anything there unless the sluic is opened."

Cross-examined: Witness was not on very unfriendly or unbrotherly terms with Mr. Decker.

Mr. Benjamin: Are you not on friendly terms with Mr. Decker?

Witness (after some hesitation): I am not.

Mr. Benjamin: Why didn't you say so at first?

Witness: That's my business.

Further cross-examined, witness admitted that he quarrelled with Mr. Decker about 3½ years ago, when Mr. Decker objected to witness cutting down a pomegranate hedge running along the western boundary of the latter's property. There was some question about a furrow from "i" to "g." Witness proposed to deepen the furrow, and Decker consented. The fence was not on the ground in 1902, but the old oak post was there at that time.

Godlieb Wilhelm A. de Villiers, of Stellenbosch, a former owner of the property in question, said he considered that the ground had been seriously depreciated in value by reason of the acts of the defendant. The only way to drain the property was over Mr. Decker's land, unless they were going to carry the water uphill.

Antonie Spannenberg (aged 74 years) and Isaac Jacobus de Villiers, both of the Paarl, also gave evidence.

Michiel Christian Vos, examiner of diagrams, Surveyor-General's Department, said that his duties were to investigate all diagrams of grants or transfers. He had inspected the diagram of 1858 showing a sub-division of the property in question. In applying the diagram he should start from the southern side, because there were established beacons there.

Mr. Van Zyl: But, say you were to start from the northern side from this wall, and you did not allow for the spaces?

Witness: But you have to do.

Mr. Van Zyl: Now look at Mr. Bisset's diagram (prepared in support of the defendant's case), can you say whether he has allowed any spaces at all?

Witness: His line there is directly up to the edge of the wall.

In cross-examination, witness said that the diagram of 1856 from which the 1858 diagram had been deduced did not show any space between the wall. The one showed a clear gap up to the wall, and the other did not. The sub-divisional surveyor had put the boundary up to the wall. In preparing the diagrams they had to be guided very largely by what they found on the ground.

Mr. Benjamin put it to witness that the sub-divisional surveyor had made an error in preparing the diagram?

Witness: That is not for me to say.

By Buchanan, A. C. J.: Witness was prepared to draw two parallel lines showing a distance of two feet to the scale shown in the diagram of 1858.

Arend Adams (54), labourer, a life-long resident at the Paarl, spoke to the furrows which were in existence while he was employed by Mr. De Villiers, a farmer of plaintiff's land, before he had attained the age of 21 years. The ground was now very different from what it formerly was, being very wet and unfit for cultivation, because of the absence of drainage. The ground was formerly the site of a vineyard.

Jacob Petersen (66), caretaker of the park and sporting grounds at the Paarl, also gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiff.

Mr. Van Zyl closed his case.

Bassett Gerald Bisset, surveyor, said that he found on the ground an old beacon, and an old oak post. There was also a quince and willow hedge. He thought there had been an error of draughtsmanship in the diagram of 1856, from which the sub-divisional diagram was framed. Witness went on to explain the details of a plan which he had prepared of the property, and the pegs which he had found on the plaintiff's ground.

Cross-examined by Mr. Van Zyl: He did not think it necessary in preparing the survey to go to the neighbouring proprietors to ascertain where the pegs were. The pegs were pointed out to him by Mr. Decker. It was customary for surveyors to go to the neighbouring proprietors if they were unable to locate the pegs themselves, or if there was no one at hand to do so. He made the survey of the ground in a period of about three hours. He only took a few of the levels at that time. It was part of the surveyor's business to take levels. He would distinctly put his levels against those of an engineer, even with the short time he had been on the ground. He did not think it necessary to go into the very wet portions of the plaintiff's ground; he went to the corners, and he saw the ground.

Buchanan, A. C. J., remarked that there was an absolute similarity between the surveys of Mr. Bisset and Mr. Moller, the only difference being in the plotting of the ground.

Mr. Van Zyl: Yes, Mr. Bisset has made an error of judgment in plotting the ground.

Arthur George Baker, surveyor, in the employ of Mr. J. Bisset, spoke to having prepared the plan on which the levels were marked.

The defendant said that when he bought the property in 1876, there was a furrow running alongside the fence from "a" to "b," his property. The furrow was then 6 in. deep, but in 1903 it was deepened, and was now about 3½ ft., the alteration having been made so as to deal with the water from the springs in the Market-square. When he purchased the property, there was no cross-furrow running in connection with "a b." In May, 1902, witness found that Abm. C. de Villiers had cut a cross-furrow to "i," and another at the south. Mr. De Villiers said that he hoped or supposed witness would not have any objection to his having cut the furrow. Witness said to him: "How do you dare to do such a thing without obtaining my consent?" and told him that he would fill up the opening at "i," and cover up the sluic as well. About fourteen days afterwards he found Mr. Abm. C. de Villiers again trespassing on the ground. Mr. De Villiers was trimming the pomegranate hedge, which was on witness's ground. Witness protested against his conduct, and told him that if he (Mr. De Villiers) persisted in trespassing, he would have to bring him to a court of law. Witness covered the furrow, and it had remained covered ever since. There had been very little cultivation on Myburgh's land, which was simply a waste piece, where cattle, horses, and mules were grazing. He had been nearly thirty years at the Paarl, and he had not known Myburgh's ground used as garden ground.

Cross-examined: Witness repaired the fence on the ground in 1902, but it was not a new fence that he then put down. There were three furrows that he had to keep open. The first was from the Market-square, running through his yard. The second received the water from Mr. Gribble's place. The third was the old original furrow which they found on their title-deeds of 1813, and which took the water from the spring. The water from Mr. Gribble's property went through "a b," but witness denied that plaintiff was entitled to send the water from his land down that furrow. He denied that the water was standing stagnant on the southern part of the plaintiff's property at the present time. It formerly stood stagnant, because plaintiff did not keep open the furrow. The slope was from south to north, and Mr. Myburgh could have drained to the willow-tree furrow. Witness was not a difficult person to get on with. He admitted having had some dispute with Mr. Gribble, but it was because the latter had sent his dirty water down the furrow.

Mr. Van Zyl: In what way would you have been prejudiced if you had allowed the water from Mr. Myburgh's land to go into "a b"?

Witness: He has no right to it.

Further cross-examined: Witness had offered £100 to Mr. Myburgh for his ground. It was after he had made the offer that he closed the furrow "c b." He had not tried to get a street through Mr. Gribble's or plaintiff's land to his property.

Re-examined: The plaintiff made the furrow after witness had made the offer to purchase the ground.

Gustav Adolph George Decker (brother of the defendant) and two coloured men also gave evidence.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

Mr. Van Zyl said that there were really four points at issue in this case. One, and the principal, was the opening of the furrow "a b" from the point "c" to "b," because, unless this furrow were opened, the drains "i" and "i g" would be of no use, and the rectification of the boundary could be of no use to the plaintiff's property. Counsel went on to argue that the evidence called for his client clearly showed that this furrow had been in existence for a period of more than thirty years, and that plaintiff was entitled by prescription to use it. Defendant admitted that this furrow "a b" had been in existence from time immemorial, and he further admitted that he had to keep open three furrows, but he said that this furrow "a b" had only been 9 inches deep, and that it had to be kept open for Gribble's property. The point in dispute was the right of the plaintiff to use this furrow as a drainage furrow for his ground. Upon this point, there was a direct conflict of evidence. What the plaintiff's witnesses had said had been absolutely denied point for point by the witnesses for the defence. Now, there could be no mistake in this case. It was a case where there must be deliberate and wilful lying on the one side or the other, and it was his (counsel's) unpleasant duty to ask his lordship, sitting as a jury, to say which of the two sets of witnesses had committed perjury in this case. Counsel proceeded to deal with the evidence called on both sides, and said that, while the plaintiff had called men who had no possible interest in the result, the defendant had not got a single disinterested witness, he had not got a single predecessor-in-title, and he had not got a single neighbour to give evidence. He went on to argue that, taking all the probabilities into consideration, the witnesses called for the plaintiff were entitled to credence. Mr. Van Zyl also discussed at some length other aspects of the case in relation to the claim for a declaration as to the boundary, and the restoration of the furrows "i" and "i g."

Without calling upon Mr. Benjamin,

Buchanan. A. C. J.: The property of plaintiff and defendant formerly belonged to one proprietor. In 1858 a portion of the property was cut off, and has been now called lots "a" and "b." This subdivision was apparently made because one part was freehold and the other was quitrent property, and was placed in one diagram. That diagram was attached to a deed of transfer dated July, 1858. On the land so cut off, marked "a" and "b," a certain spring arises towards the northern part of the property. This spring, upon a survey by Mr. Bisset, appears to drain into a marsh, and below the marsh on the northern property was a furrow conveying the water of the spring and marsh down over the defendant's property towards the Berg River. That furrow is still open, and it is not in question in this case. In 1903 the lot "a" and "b" is for the first time sub-divided, and the southern portion is cut off, and now belongs to the plaintiff. The defendant's boundary line runs along a portion of the southern boundary, and the defendant's property is also the boundary on the eastern side of the plaintiff's property. The plaintiff claims a declaration as to the boundary fence on the southern side of his property between himself and defendant, and he claims a right to use a drain on the defendant's property on the southern side, and he also claims a right to use a drain on the eastward side, also on the defendant's property. The first question raised in the declaration is as to the true boundary line between plaintiff and defendant. Learned counsel has referred to the fact that there is a direct conflict of testimony between the parties, and he has said that the Court cannot decide this question without attributing perjury to the one side or the other. The Court has no such wish to impute perjury as that. If we look at the facts, we find that what the plaintiff's witnesses are speaking about is a state of affairs which existed some time ago, and which does not exist at the present moment. It is not as though they were speaking of what is the fact now, but what was the fact some years before, and it is quite easy for persons to be mistaken as to what they believed existed in former years. Take the old gentleman, Mr. Spannenberg, who is said to have one leg in the grave. Well, he is a hearty old gentleman, and I hope he may live for years yet, but still he is an illustration of the point. He said that he was once in his garden some twelve years ago, and he looked over the hedge, and he compared what he says he saw then with what exists now. It would be ridiculous to impute perjury to Mr. Spannenberg, in what he states. He spoke what he believed to be the truth, but he was speaking of something he saw some years ago, and comparing it with what he saw recently. That explains the discrepancy in the evidence, without imputing perjury to the one side or the other. In this case we have the actual existing state of facts to start with, and this existing state of facts is against the plaintiff on all the claims that he makes in this case. Take, first, the question of boundary. The boundary is defined on the southern side, between plaintiff and defendant, by an existing fence. The defendant, who has been in possession of the property for 29 years, says that he came on to the property, and has been there ever since. There has been no survey between 1858, and the sub-division made to give transfer to the plaintiff, but it must be borne in mind that this sub-division diagram, which was then made by a surveyor, was made not at the instance of the defendant, but at the instance of the plaintiff and his predecessor-in-title, and in that diagram it is clearly laid down what the figure as represented by the old diagram is, and also clearly laid down what the beacons on the ground are. The beacons on the ground the surveyors agree coincide with the fence which is there existing at the present time. Now, to say that the old original diagram must be accepted in face of this occupation, of this recognised position of beacons which were recognised at the time plaintiff bought—to say that this occupation, which has lasted for nearly thirty years, can now be upset, I think no court could in justice do. Mr. Decker says he has been there all the time since he bought, and this evidence is corroborated strongly by the diagram made when plaintiff bought. I am bound to say that the fence was selected as the boundary between the two parties. With regard to the paragraph of the declaration, therefore, as to the boundaries between the plaintiff and defendant, the evidence convinces me that the boundary is according to the red line shown on the diagram attached to plaintiff's title. That I take it on Mr. Moller's plan is "a.k." Then, dealing with the furrow outside the plaintiff's boundary, which is the next claim, the plaintiff claims access to this furrow. He has never had access to it. He says that, as proprietor of the ground, his freehold entitles him to access. I think that the defendant's statement is correct that this furrow was originally a very small furrow, a few inches in depth, and that it carried the water down in defendant's land to the river. I am not convinced on the evidence that the plaintiff has any right by prescription to the user of this furrow. There may have been occasional access to this furrow, but that there has been constant user of this furrow for the drainage of plaintiff's land I am not convinced. There is no doubt that when one piece of ground lies naturally below the other the lower lying proprietor is bound to receive any water that goes to him. But that is a different thing from saying that the upper proprietor has a right to collect all the drainage on his ground and discharge it on the lower lying ground at any specific point. Looking at the levels taken, I am not satisfied that any drainage would naturally go from the property of the plaintiff on to the defendant's land on the southern boundary. The levels show a fall from the west to the east, but the levels do not show that there is a fall or a marked fall from the north to the south. Taking the cross sections of the levels given by Surveyor Bisset, higher up the ground, the ground is almost level, or, if anything, slightly sloping towards the centre of the plaintiff's ground, certainly not from plaintiff's ground to the defendant's ground. There is a fall from the west to the east, but not from the north to the south. Plaintiff's engineer, who has taken the levels on the southern boundary, discovers the fall between plaintiff's northern and southern boundary to be .04 of a foot, something less than half an inch. The defendant's levels taken by Mr. Bisset and Mr. Baker on the other hand are not taken at exactly the same point where Mr. De Villiers has taken his levels. There is no natural drainage from Myburgh's property from the north to the south. There is a distinct fall from the west to the east, and Decker's property to the east of Mr. Myburgh's property certainly lies at a lower level, and has to receive any water which may naturally come down there. Then plaintiff claims that a drain, which he says previously existed on Decker's property, should be re-opened, and Decker should be forced to receive at a point marked "i" any water which may be collected on plaintiff's property, and sent down on this property. This claim also is founded upon a mistake. No such drain has existed as long as plaintiff has occupied the property. The defendant says that some years previously, in 1891, there was a ditch cut by a previous owner on the defendant's property, but that after he had allowed this to remain a fortnight, further disputes arose, and this sluic was closed up, and has never been used since. The previous owner of plaintiff's property did not attempt to assert a right to the sluic. The sluic did not exist at the time plaintiff bought the property. Learned counsel for the plaintiff says that the property is useless to the plaintiff unless he can get drainage. As I said before, the lower proprietor must receive the drainage, which comes naturally to it, but that is a different thing from saying that the plaintiff has a right at common law to send the drainage from his property on to the defendant's land at any point where he may choose. Here again, I think that the plaintiff has failed to establish any prescriptive right such as he claims. To the unprofessional mind, it seems that the drainage is from the marsh along the willow furrow, where a drain still exists. That drain was not sold in the property originally sold to the plaintiff. I see no reason why that drain should not carry all the water which collects on the plaintiff's property. There is no objection to that drain being used. I think, therefore, that it has been established that the true boundary between the plaintiff and defendant is the line "a.k." on Mr. Moller's plan. The plaintiff has failed to acquire a right by prescription to a servitude over the defendant's property to the drain "a.b.," or a proposed drain running over the southern side. Under these circumstances, there must be judgment for the defendant, with costs. A declaration will be made that the true boundary between the plaintiff and defendant on the southern side is the line "a.k." on the plan prepared by Mr. Surveyor Moller (Exhibit No. 1), which coincides with the line "c.d.," on the diagram annexed to plaintiff's transfer.

On the application of Mr. Benjamin, his lordship allowed defendant's expenses as a necessary witness, and the qualifying costs of Mr. Bisset and Mr. Baker.

SECOND DIVISION:

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

MCKAY AND CO. V. HODGSON. { 1905.
{ Nov. 22nd.

Dr. Greer moved, as a matter of urgency, for leave to remove interdicted stock from certain premises, which had become untenable since the interdict was granted, as the stock was at present deteriorating. The stock consisted of music and musical instruments.

Mr. Close, who appeared to oppose on behalf of the respondents, said his client, the landlord, had an interdict granted on the goods of the applicant, as a considerable sum of money was owing to the respondent. The deterioration had only been discovered since the interdict was granted. Whatever was wrong with the premises they were being put right at the present moment.

[Maasdorp, J.: I don't think we can deal with this matter now. It should come on in the ordinary course.]

Dr. Greer pointed out that the damage was continuing from day to day.

Maasdorp, J.: You can give notice in the ordinary way—that is 48 hours, I believe—then I will take it myself, if it can't be heard elsewhere. In the meantime the parties should consider whether they cannot come to a settlement.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the
Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

REX V. KOBOSE AND MKEBO. { 1905.
Nov. 23rd.

Summons—Arrest—Particulars of charge—R.M. Court.

K. was charged with stock theft. The evidence of the first witness for the prosecution implicated also M. (K.'s son). M. was thereupon arrested without summons and placed in the dock. He did not except to the want of summons and did not appear to be prejudiced thereby. That portion of the evidence which had been taken was read over to him, and he was convicted.

Held on appeal, that the appeal must be dismissed.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Lusikisiki, Western Pondoland, who had convicted the accused under Act No. 35 of 1893, as amended by Proclamation No. 109 of 1900, with the crime of theft. In that, on the 3rd September last, they did wrongfully and unlawfully kill a certain he-goat, the property and in the lawful possession of Mganji, of Dulile's Location. Kobose was found guilty of receiving stolen property, knowing the same to have been stolen, and was sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour; Mkebo was found guilty of the theft, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the evidence for the Crown was absolutely conclusive. No defence of any kind had been set up by the prisoners. The Court consequently had come to the conclusion that they had no defence to make. Mkebo was brought into the case and charged after the proceedings had been commenced against Kobose. He was arrested outside the Court, and offered no objection to being tried on the charge of receiving stolen property.

Mr. Sutton appeared for the appellants; Mr. Pyemont appeared for the Crown.

Mr. Sutton contended that the charge was not set out with sufficient particularity against the second accused. The record merely was: "At this stage of the proceedings Mbeko also is placed in the dock and charged also with the theft of Mganji's goat. Counsel relied on the case of Rex v. Albert and Others (3 High Court Reports, 487). Prejudice had, he submitted, accrued to the accused in consequence of the irregularity in the proceedings. The second point taken by counsel was that no summons was served on Mkebo, according to Rule 68 of the Resident Magistrate's Court Act. In support of this contention, he relied on the section and also the case of Queen v. Cooper (1879, Buchanan, 152). He argued that the accused had not waived his right to take any point of objection which he might have taken in the Court below.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the case of Queen v. Sampson (8 Juta, 229), where an hotelkeeper at Durbanville had been convicted of selling liquor to a native, seemed to him very much in point.

Mr. Sutton went on to contend that another point in favour of the accused Mbeko was that the proceedings were irregular and informal. The evidence which had already been taken against the first accused was read over to the second accused, and was not taken in his presence. The whole case against the second accused depended upon a confession made by the other accused. Such a confession, counsel submitted, was not admissible as against the second accused. As to the first accused, counsel said all that appeared was that Kobose had eaten some of the goat. On that ground he submitted that Kobose could not be found guilty of stealing the whole goat.

Without calling upon Mr. Pyemont,

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The Magistrate was called upon to try a charge of theft of a goat stolen from a native location in his districe. The prisoner who was first charged was Kobose. During the hearing of the case, on the evidence of the first witness, it became apparent that the son (Mbeko) was also implicated in the theft. Mbeko was thereupon arrested and brought into court, and placed in the dock by the side of his father. Both father and son were defended by an attorney. On the charge-sheet the charge against Kobose, "stealing a goat, the property of Mganji," was set out with every necessary particular. When the son was arrested he was also charged with stealing this goat, the property of Mganji, and he pleaded not guilty. The attorney who defended the accused took no exception to the proceedings. It is now alleged on behalf of the son that the conviction should be set aside on the ground, firstly, that the charge, in his case, was not set out with sufficient particularity. I think the record shows that the charge was set out with sufficient particularity to let him know what he was being tried for. The next point is that no summons was served upon the accused. There is no doubt that by the rules of Court an accused can require a charge made against him to be specified in a summons or warrant before he is tried. But then the appellant did not take this objection at the trial, and require a summons or warrant to be served upon him. If he does not take this objection, it has been held in many cases that it is a common practice in the Magistrates' Courts not to issue summonses in cases of this kind. If there was any prejudice accruing to the accused, in consequence of the absence of a summons, the objection might have been considered, but it has not been shown that accused was prejudiced. The third ground of appeal is one of some importance, viz., that evidence had been given at the trial which was not taken in any way in the presence of the prisoner. It is the rule of a criminal trial that evidence must be given in the presence of the accused. In this case the father had been tried, and one witness had deposed against the father before the second accused was put into the dock. This first witness was still under examination, and the evidence he had given was read over to the second accused, and he was asked if he had any questions to put. The attorney who appeared for the prisoners did not put any question, and the case was allowed to go. A case has been referred to in which the Court quashed a conviction where evidence had been given in the absence of the prisoner, but in that case the whole of the evidence for the prosecution had been given in the absence of the prisoner, and the witnesses were not present to enable the prisoner to cross-examine them. In that case there was no evidence given in his presence to connect the prisoner with the crime. But in this case not only had the prisoner an opportunity of cross-examining the witness, but subsequently there was ample evidence called in his presence, making it clear that the Magistrate was justified in convicting him. Another technical objection taken on behalf of the first accused is that he was convicted of receiving the goat, knowing it to have been stolen. Well, perhaps, strictly speaking, he ought to have been convicted of receiving a portion only of the stolen property, but that is no ground for upsetting the conviction. The evidence is that when the search party found the prisoners they were actually consuming the stolen meat. The appeal must be dismissed.

REX V. SIJOVU.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Tsomo, convicting the appellant Sijovu, of Mbulu, of contravening section 26 of Proclamation 104, 1903, by selling brandy and other intoxicating liquor to a native without having obtained the licence required in that behalf. The appellant had been fined £30, or in default, three months' imprisonment with hard labour.

The Magistrate's reasons for judgment were as follows: Sijovu is charged with selling to one Buyapi a bottle of brandy, and from a careful consideration of the evidence, there is no doubt that brandy was in the hut on the day in question, and that not alone Buyapi purchased some of it, but Mantshanghasi, and on the same day and in the same hut. The defence objects to the evidence of Mantshanghasi, but I fail to see that it should have been rejected on the ground of remoteness by want of reasonable connection between the principal and evidentiary fact. Diamond was an unsatisfactory witness, and one who apparently wished to bark with the hounds and run with the hare, and gave one an impression that there was a good deal of suppressio veri; but even he admits that brandy was being consumed in the hut. The defence raised, taking in consideration the trend of native opinion on the subject, is little short of impertinence, and the suggested righteous indignation of Sijovu on being asked to sell brandy is Gilbertian. Then, again, each witness admits the existence of brandy in the hut, but the accused denies it, and adds: "We drank nothing, not even tea, on the day in question." It need hardly be added that the greatest difficulty is experienced in procuring the support of natives to prosecutions of this nature. The liquor traffic is terribly rife, and is supported by practically the whole of the native community. In the assault case which preceded this case, I did not call upon the defence, merely because, from the evidence, it was impossible to say who commenced the affair, but that an assault was committed there is no room for doubt. Generally, I found that, taking the evidence as a whole, there were strong indications that Sijovu was carrying on illicit liquor traffic.

Mr. Benjamin for appellant; Mr. Py-mont for the Crown.

Mr. Benjamin said that the notice of appeal was given on the ground that the conviction was not supported by the evidence. Practically the only evidence against the accused was that of Buyapi. They must find, either that he was employed as a trap or that he was influenced by spite. If he were a trap, then the Court would require very strong corroboration of his evidence before convicting. He however, denied that he was employed as a trap. Then he must have been influenced by spite or ill-will, probably arising out of a quarrel he had had with accused. Then they must have the very strongest corroboration before convicting the accused. Referring to the reasons for judgment, counsel commented on the picturesque terms which the Magistrate had employed, and remarked that the Magistrate might have taken into consideration that there was a certain "Mr. Justice Shallow." "Certainly," added counsel, "in some of his reasons he does not seem to have differed very much from Mr. Justice Shallow." Proceeding, Mr. Benjamin commented on the evidence admitted by the Magistrate, and said that the Court below had admitted evidence which might very well have been admitted in a similar case by "Mr. Justice Shallow." At the very least, there was so much doubt in the case, that the accused should have had the benefit of it.

Without calling upon Mr. Pyemont, Buchanan, A.C.J.: In this case the accused is charged with selling liquor to a native, accused, not having a licence to sell. The accused is also a native, living in a location where liquor is not allowed. The main evidence of the sale is that of a native named Buyapi. He says he went to the hut of the accused, and when there he bought a half bottle of brandy for 2s. 6d., which he paid, but that, after some drinking, a row took place, the accused committed an assault upon him, and ejected him from the hut. Accused was charged with assault, but was acquitted. Had it been clear that this was a case which depended entirely upon the evidence of a native who was animated by motives of revenge, I do not think the Magistrate would have been justified in convicting the accused, but the question in this case is whether or not the evidence of Buyapi has been sufficiently corroborated to justify the Magistrate in coming to the conclusion that his story is to be believed, and not that of the accused. The accused was the only witness called for the defence, and he positively denied that he had brandy in this hut at all. He says that no drinking took place, and that they did not even drink tea on the day in question. Now, the accused had the brandy after he left the hut, and he went to the hut of a man named Mbanga, and showed him the brandy, and also told him that he had been assaulted by the accused. Mbanga tasted it, and found that it was brandy. Then we have the evidence of one Diamond, who says that there was brandy in the hut on that occasion, and there was drinking going on in the hut, and that the prisoner was there. Then a woman is called, who on the same day was in the hut, and bought some brandy there. Counsel is quite correct in saying that this is not evidence of the sale with which the accused was charged, no notice having been given him of the fact, but it is very strong corroborative evidence to show that there was liquor in the hut, and that liquor was to be had by people who wished to buy it. I am not, therefore, prepared to say that the evidence was so well-balanced that the accused ought to have had the benefit of the doubt. There is sufficient corroborative evidence, I think, to justify the Magistrate in convicting the accused, and to show that the Court of Appeal, not having the witnesses before it should not interfere. The impression made on my mind from reading the record is that there was liquor sold in the hut. The appeal will be dismissed.

REX V. YOYO AND RADASI.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant R.M. of the Cape, sitting at Uitvlugt. The accused, Isaac Yoyo, and Arthur Radasi, had been convicted of selling Kafir beer to two natives at Radasi's Buildings, Ndabeni Location. Yoyo, who was alleged to have served the beer, was fined £20, or three months' imprisonment, with hard labour; Radasi was fined £100, or six months' imprisonment, with hard labour. The appeal was brought by Radasi on the ground that the evidence given in the court below did not support the conviction, and that certain evidence had been accepted, and received by the Magistrate as admissible, which was in law wholly inadmissible.

Dr. Greer was for the appellant (Radasi); Mr. Pyemont was for the Crown.

Dr. Greer said that as regarded the first point of the appeal, there was a considerable conflict in the evidence. In regard to the second point, the only evidence to connect the appellant with the crime was that of the Corporal David Ngxiki, and a considerable portion of that evidence was inadmissible so far as the appellant was concerned. Unless the Court should find that Maria Sturman were employed as a cover, there was no evidence that Radasi had an interest in the occupation of the premises.

Mr. Pyemont submitted that under the very suspicious circumstances surrounding the whole case, the Magistrate was justified in presuming that the first accused sold for, and at the instance of the second accused. The evidence showed that the second accused was about the premises, and that this woman Maria, was known as Mrs. Radasi. Radasi owned the buildings, and he retained an interest in the occupancy by reason of the rooms occupied by Maria.

Dr. Greer having been heard in reply.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said the two accused, Yoyo and Radasi, were charged before the Magistrate of the district of the Cape with contravening the Liquor Licensing Act, in selling liquor without a licence. They were both convicted, and Yoyo has not appealed against his conviction, but Radasi has. The evidence for the Crown is that, on the Sunday in question, the 12th September last, a raid was made of certain premises known as Radasi's Buildings; that a number of natives were there drinking Kafir beer, which, by the Act of Parliament, is prohibited for sale without a licence; and that one man was arrested coming out of the place with a tin of beer in his possession, and he has also been prosecuted and punished for having beer without a licence. The evidence is clear that prisoner No. 1 (Yoyo) was the active agent in selling the beer and taking the money, and it is also shown that he did not live on the premises, that he worked at the Government Goods Station, and that he was only at that place on that evening for the sale of that beer. The evidence shows that the accused, Radasi, let the buildings, and I think that sufficient evidence was given to support the Magistrate's finding that he was present on the occasion in question. The premises belonged to the defendant, who let rooms to a number of people. The compartments let to Maria Sturman are the rooms in which the beer was sold. The defendant says that he had nothing to do with Maria Sturman or her compartments, but that the next compartment was occupied by his sweetheart, Lena. The evidence shows that he was on Maria Sturman's premises on the evening in question, that he was the owner of the house, and that he was in and out while the beer was being sold in his own premises, and that he must have seen the transaction taking place. The native constable says that he knows that Radasi lives in the house out of which the man came who was in possession of the beer. He related a statement which was made by prisoner No. 1 that the beer was sold by him (Yoyo) on Radasi's instructions, but I think Dr. Greer is correct when he contends that that statement made by prisoner No. 1 is not evidence against No. 2, seeing that it was not made in his presence. In considering this appeal, that part of the evidence will be dismissed from consideration. The constable goes on to say that, after Radasi had been arrested, Maria Sturman came to see him, and that a conversation then took place between the accused and the woman Maria. That is admitted by the defence, but the evidence as to the nature of the conversation differs. I think it curious, if the defendant's version is correct, that Maria Sturman should have gone at all to see Radasi on the subject. Then, again, we have the evidence of a shopkeeper in the neighbourhood, and he says that he has a pass-book for goods sold to Maria Sturman, this woman Maria, and that he supplied goods to the woman under the name of Mrs. Radasi, and that shortly before the affair took place, he altered the name to Mrs. Sturman. Then certain receipts are produced of rent alleged to have been paid to Radasi by the woman, but these receipts have evidently been manufactured for the case. Under the circumstances, the Magistrate has come to the conclusion that the two accused were acting in concert. He had the witnesses before him, and no doubt there is a conflict of testimony; but it is not like a case in which there is no corroboration of evidence given by the police, or by a trap, or by a person who is actuated by spite. There is no reason given why the constable should have been actuated by spite, and there is corroboration of his evidence. I do not see my way clear to say that the Magistrate, on the evidence laid before him, having seen the witnesses, is wrong in his finding. I think, under all these circumstances, the Court cannot interfere in this case. The appeal will be dismissed.

REX V. JOSLING.

Cruelty to animals—Emasculation
—Act 18 of 1888, Sec. 2.

Under Sec. 2 of Act 18 of 1888, a person may not be prosecuted for emasculating an animal provided he has reasonable cause for so doing.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Kenhardt, who had convicted the appellant of a contravention of Section 2, Act 18 of 1888, by inflicting wanton cruelty upon a certain domestic animal, viz., a cat, by emasculating it. The appellant was sentenced to pay a fine of £1, or in default, seven days' imprisonment, with hard labour.

Dr. Greer was for the appellant.

Mr. Pyemont (for the Crown) said that the Attorney-General did not support the conviction.

Dr. Greer said that the appellant had performed an operation upon a cat which he submitted was a proper one.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that the appeal would be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

REX V. GEALL.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Elliot, who had convicted appellant of the crime of assault. The accused was charged with assaulting a Hottentot named Johannes, with intent to inflict upon him grievous bodily harm. He was found guilty of common assault, and sentenced to 21 days' imprisonment, with hard labour.

The allegation was that accused, formerly a member of the C.M.R., struck the Hottentot on the head, and threw him on a fire, causing him divers wounds, burns, and injuries.

The accused denied having assaulted the complainant.

Mr. Struben was for appellant; Mr. Pyemont was for the Crown.

Mr. Struben said that the ground of appeal was that the conviction was not supported by the evidence given before the Court below, and was contrary to law. The evidence of the two white men called for the defence was plain and straightforward, and the witnesses supported each other, but the evidence given by the witnesses for the Crown, who seemed to be very much interested in each other, was very greatly at variance. The witnesses for the prosecution contradicted each other on most material points. The Magistrate's judgment ought to have stated whether he found the accused guilty of assaulting the Hottentot with his fist or throwing him upon the fire. He urged that the facts all tended to show that the accused closed with the Hottentot, but that it was in order to protect himself from an attack. Counsel also urged that the sentence passed upon the accused was needlessly severe.

Without calling upon Mr. Pyemont,

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The appellant was charged with assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm, and it is alleged that he threw the complainant upon a fire, thereby causing him divers injuries and burns. That the complainant was burned in consequence of this assault is clear, but the Magistrate seems to have taken the view that the burning had been unintentional, and not intentional. The evidence of an assault, however, is all one way. Even the prisoner's own evidence fully justifies the Magistrate in convicting of assault. There is no conflict of evidence which would justify any Court in setting aside this conviction. The admissions made by the prisoner himself justified the Magistrate in finding him guilty. The Magistrate has sentenced the accused to imprisonment for 21 days with hard labour. He has not given the accused the option of a fine. That is a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. This Court cannot alter the sentence. I see no ground whatever for interfering with the Magistrate's decision. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

MCKAY AND CO. V. HODGSON { 1905.
Nov. 24th.

Dr. Greer moved as a matter of urgency for an order authorising the applicants to remove certain goods now under interdict at 6 and 8, Church-street, Cape Town, to such premises as they may decide upon, the said goods to remain under attachment at the new premises. Mr. Benjamin appeared for the respondent.

The petitioners stated that they were music warehousemen, carrying on business at 6 and 8, Church-street, and had been restrained from removing their goods from 6, Church-street, pending an action to be brought by the respondent for arrear rent. The said premises were not in a fit and tenable state of repair, and by reason of this the goods were being damaged. They would at the proper time claim for the unlawful attachment of their goods, and damage to their goods and fittings. An affidavit by Neil Holmes, of Woodstock, a contractor, stated that damage would be done to the stock unless the alterations were carried out, and the goods removed. It would be necessary to take up the floor and excavate to a depth of about three feet, in order to provide proper ventilation.

An answering affidavit by respondent (Charles Hodgson) said that the applicants had been tenants of the said premises for a large number of years, and were at present indebted to him exclusive of the month of November, in a sum of £355 for arrear rent. He had been compelled to apply for an interdict restraining the respondents from removing the goods pending an action to be brought for rent. He had taken out a summons for £355. Applicants had repeatedly acknowledged their indebtedness to him in the amount claimed, but continually asked for time in which to discharge the amount. The result of his leniency would be that at the end of this month they would be indebted to him in a sum of £400. They had made this application purely and simply to gain time. As to the alleged bad state of the premises, the matter was only recently brought under his notice by the applicants, and he was quite prepared to give them beneficial occupation of the premises so long as applicants remained there. He had instructed his architect to have such repairs carried out as may be necessary. He had no wish to continue the applicants in the premises, and he would consent to their goods being removed provided that they deposited with the Registrar of the Court sufficient security to cover the amount of his claim. An affidavit by Mr. Rowe Rowe stated that he had been entrusted with the supervision of such works as may be necessary, and the execution of the works had already been commenced.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: What is the value of the stock, Mr. Greer?]

I am instructed that it amounts to about £6,000 in value and consists of pianos, organs, and music generally.

A replying affidavit by Mr. Bischoff, a member of the applicant firm, denied that the sum of £355, or any portion thereof, was due to the respondent. It was arranged that the arrear rent, £355, should be paid off in monthly instalments, and the applicants had paid the instalments as they had become due. He denied that there was any undue haste on the part of the applicants in this application, or that there was any intention to deprive the respondent of his landlord's lien. It was impossible for the respondent to give them beneficial occupation of the premises. The more the floor was torn up the more was it found to be in bad state. The place was rotten with fungus, and the stench was unbearable, and the applicants had had to pile their stock on the pianos and on the floor next door. The whole of the flooring was being torn up.

Dr. Greer: We are willing that the lien should still continue.

[Buchanan, A.C.J.: The new landlord would have the first lien.]

Not if he lets us in with notice of a previous lien.

[Buchanan, J.: Oh, yes.]

We discovered the state of the premises only in October. The whole floor has been taken up. We have no beneficial occupation, and are not told when we shall get it. The stock is being seriously depreciated.

Mr. Benjamin (replying to the Court) said that the respondent had instituted his action.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The applicants in this case occupy premises belonging to the respondent, the rent for which has been allowed to run into arrear to a considerable amount. The rent being in arrear, the landlord, to secure his lien, obtained an attachment of the tenant's goods in his premises. That attachment still exists. The tenant now alleges that, although he has been in possession of the premises a considerable time, the premises are in such a state of disrepair that the goods are being damaged. It is curious that this fact was not discovered before the attachment took place. However, the landlord is entitled to his lien. To prevent the possibility of any loss being suffered, the Court will order the attachment to be set aside upon applicants paying a sum of £400 into court, or providing security in that amount to the satisfaction of the Registrar, costs of motion to abide the result of the action.

CIVIL APPEALS.

VAN SCHOOR V. VAN REENEN. } 1905.
 } Nov. 24th.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of the Cape, sitting at Durbanville, in an action brought by the present appellant for payment of £100 on a promissory note made by Johannes Albertus Vink, and signed by the respondent as surety.

It appeared that the maker of the note had become insolvent, and the plaintiff sued the surety, because he thought it was useless proceeding against the maker. At the hearing in the Court below, an exception was taken by defendant to the summons, on the ground that the principal should first have been excused. The Magistrate upheld the exception, and granted absolution from the instance, with costs.

Dr. Greer was for appellant, Willem van Schoor; the respondent, John van Reenen, did not appear.

Dr. Greer argued that insolvency was in itself excussion.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: You are entitled to have your appeal allowed, with costs. The exception will be overruled, and the case remitted to the Resident Magistrate's Court for further hearing and determination.

MOLEMOHI V. TEMPLE.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Matatiele in an action brought by the present appellant, Anthony Molemohi, against the respondent, Henry Francis Temple, to recover a sum of £35. The decision of the Court below was judgment for the defendant, with costs.

The plaintiff—a native—brought an action against respondent to recover £35, under somewhat peculiar circumstances. The Magistrate found for defendant, and from that judgment plaintiff now appealed. In his summons, plaintiff said defendant was an attorney, and about four or five years ago plaintiff instructed him to defend him in a certain action brought by John Molemohi. Judgment was entered for John Molemohi. A writ was issued against the plaintiff in satisfaction of the judgment, and 32 head of cattle were attached, and two were sold by the messenger of the Court, and realised £35. An appeal was noted, and the Magistrate's judgment was reversed, and absolution from the instance given, and thirty head of cattle were returned to plaintiff. The defendant, when asked for the return of £35 which had been paid to him as proceeds of the sale of the cattle, refused to do so. A second action was subsequently brought, and on this occasion Anthony Molemohi won. An appeal was taken, but it was dismissed.

The defendant pleaded that plaintiff agreed, and paid to defendant proceeds of the two oxen as and for his fees in connection with the second case, disbursements to be borne by plaintiff. Defendant accepted the two oxen in full settlement of all his fees in the action to be brought. Alternatively, he counter-claimed for £35, by way of a set-off.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said he considered that the probabilities of the case were in favour of defendant, and that the agreement alleged was actually made. It was not likely that defendant would have conducted a case for several years without arranging for his fees, especially when he had plenty of opportunities of doing so.

Mr. Swift was for the appellant; Mr. Benjamin was for the respondent.

During the reading of the record,

Buchanan, A.C.J., remarked that these natives were at the mercy of the legal practitioners

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Temple is an attorney of good standing in the Territories.

Mr. Swift said that the real point in this case was whether the agreement to pay £35 was actually made. The Magistrate appeared to have relied on the probabilities. Probabilities, counsel submitted, were not sufficient; they must have proof. On the one hand they had an attorney trained in the conduct and management of business and financial matters, and on the other they had a native unsophisticated and, as the Magistrate said, "untutored." Respondent seemed to have kept his books in a most irregular and, for an attorney, improper manner. He had failed to produce proper documentary evidence. Counsel asked his lordship to mark his disapproval of Mr. Temple's conduct by reversing the judgment of the Court below.

Mr. Benjamin said he thought it was unfortunate that appellant was not advised to sue for his bill of costs in the Court below. The present matter arose out of the second action, which was apparently of a most intricate character, and involved questions of native succession. An agreement was made to pay respondent £35, and defendant was entitled to that amount whether appellant had been successful or not in the suit brought against him. It must be borne in mind that defendant had made no charge against plaintiff in respect of his services in the criminal case. One could understand that Mr. Temple did not put down in his book the various items simply because of the agreement that he was to receive the £35.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: The record is very voluminous, and there is a great deal of confusion in the evidence as taken, but I think one can winnow out the essential points in this action. The plaintiff sued the defendant for £35, which the defendant admits he received on account of the plaintiff. The way that £35 was recovered was this: One John Molemohi brought an action against appellant in the Magistrate's Court, and succeeded in obtaining judgment, whereupon an appeal was noted by the present appellant, and he succeeded in that appeal. In the meantime, for some unexplained reason, the Magistrate's Messenger sold two head of cattle belonging to the present plaintiff, part of the proceeds of which, as far as one can ascertain, went to the plaintiff's adviser in the action, Mr. Danes, and the other part to the present defendant, who was the adviser of the defendant in the action. Afterwards, on the appeal proving successful, the rest of this sum of £35 was paid to defendant (Temple). Temple also recovered from John Molemohi his costs of the previous action. He had as well received certain amounts as advances from the plaintiff, part of which was repaid. After the first case had been heard and the appeal had been allowed, John Molemohi intimated his intention of bringing a second action against the present plaintiff, and, according to the defendant's plea, this £35 was to be left by plaintiff in settlement of defendant's fees in the action which was about to be brought—that was that this £35 was to be kept as a deposit to secure the attorney's costs in case further proceedings should be taken. On this point we have the defendant's own statement, in which he says the agreement between himself and plaintiff was that he was to pay him £35 as an amount stated as his fee in the second action, exclusive of disbursements. Against this we have the positive denial of the plaintiff, and we have also the evidence of Temple's own interpreter, who apparently acts on behalf of the defendant, and whose evidence, I think, is very important and conclusive on this point. He says what took place is that Temple asked plaintiff to be allowed to keep the £35 for the two oxen to work up the second case. Now, what is the meaning of that, but a deposit to pay outlay and costs which the agent might incur in the second case? The interpreter says that the plaintiff agreed to this. The second case came on, and John Molemohi failed, and an appeal was taken, and he failed also in the appeal, and it is common cause that Temple recovered all his costs to which he was entitled in both the second action and the second appeal from the other side. The Magistrate had an extraordinary statement in his judgment, in which he seems to imply that when a client deposits money with an attorney for the purpose of conducting or defending an action, even though the attorney recovers his costs, the client is not entitled to get back his deposit unless at the time a specific agreement to that effect is made between the attorney and the client. This remarkable statement in his judgment cannot be sustained on any ground. The Magistrate says: "Plaintiff probably expected to get back his costs, having got judgment for them in both cases, and, as a refund of these appears to be entirely a matter of arrangement between attorney and client, not having made it, the plaintiff, an untutored native, naturally would be dissatisfied when he ultimately discovered that judgment for such costs made no difference to him when he had won his case." One cannot understand a Magistrate making such a statement as that. It clearly does not require any previous agreement. It is clear that the Magistrate has gone altogether wrong in his judgment. The appeal will be allowed, with costs, and judgment given on the claim in convention for £35, which the defendant himself admits he has had. The defendant claims alternatively for a bill of costs which he has made up to £35, the amount of the plaintiff's claim. He sets out certain items and then in order to reach the amount of the plaintiff's claim he puts down a lump sum of £2 2s. 6d. When we look at the bill of costs there are two items referring to a criminal charge. The present plaintiff, when the cattle were seized and taken away by the messenger—why, I really cannot understand—while the appeal was pending, resisted the seizure of his cattle, a thing which he had no right to do, and he was taken before the Magistrate and fined. The attorney charges him £1 1s. for receiving instructions and £6 6s. for defending him against the criminal charge. Well, it may be an exorbitant charge to make, but, still, this was a criminal offence, and the Court is not in a position to tax the charge. The plaintiff admits that he did not pay the defendant for defending him, and probably something is due to Mr. Temple on that account. Mr. Temple had charged him seven guineas and the Court will allow that amount, but as to the other items of the bill, will grant absolution from the instance. They seem all to refer to the second action brought by John Molemohi against the defendant. Prima facie, the defendant is not entitled to get his costs from both the plaintiff and the defendant in the action. The appeal will be allowed with costs, and judgment will be given for the plaintiff on the claim in convention for £35 and for the plaintiff (Temple) on the claim in reconvention for £7 7s., and absolution from the instance on the remainder of the claim in reconvention. The £7 7s. bill will be set off against the amount awarded in convention, and the defendant must pay the costs in the Court below.

BENJAMIN V. SHORE.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Montagu in an interpleader suit which had been brought to determine the executability of certain horses, cart, and harness.

An action had been brought by Mr. Benjamin against Mr. Steyn for £60, the purchase price of certain two horses, and interest and costs. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, Benjamin, against Steyn on the 14th September. A writ of execution was issued and two horses, a cart, and a set of harness were attached by the messenger. A letter of protest was written by the agent of a man named Shore, the present respondent. Subsequently a summons was issued and an interpleader case came on for hearing before the R.M. The Magistrate gave judgment that the horses, cart, and harness belonged to Shore, and that they were not executable. Against that decision the present appeal was brought.

Mr. W. Porter Buchanan was for appellant; Mr. Alexander was for respondent.

Counsel having been heard in argument,

Buchanan, A.C.J.: One Benjamin obtained judgment in the Magistrate's Court against one Steyn, and took out a writ of execution upon this judgment. Under this writ the messenger attached a cart, a set of harness, and two horses in the possession of Steyn, whereupon Shore interpleaded and claimed the cart, harness, and horses as being his property. In this case there is no question of the credibility of witnesses; the only question is one of law arising under the following circumstances. Shore originally hired a cart, harness, and pair of horses to Steyn, for which Steyn was to pay £5 a month. This hiring was in terms of a written document, and the agreement was to last for a period of five months. After the expiration of the five months Steyn was allowed to continue in possession of the property, and he says he received permission—and in this Shore agrees with him—to barter the horses at his pleasure on the understanding that at any time when called upon by him he was to deliver to Shore two horses, or their value. Thereupon Steyn first bartered one of the horses, and then the other. These horses he again bartered, making a considerable profit for himself on these transactions. In one case he received £20, in another £13, and in a third instance he received two horses for one. All the transactions were for the benefit of Steyn. He did not act as agent for Shore; on the contrary, he acted for himself, and has received all the benefits. Had the horses which were seized been the original horses hired by Steyn, they could not have been taken in execution, but when once Shore allowed the property to be used for another person's business and for another's profit he lost his ownership. As a pure question of law, independently altogether of the evidence, I think the magistrate was wrong in holding that these horses belonged to Shore. They were clearly Steyn's property, and acquired by him, though obtained, no doubt, out of the original property leased to him by Shore. The appeal will, therefore, be allowed, with costs, and judgment in the Magistrate's court altered to a declaration that the horses are liable to seizure in execution of the writ obtained by the appellant. As to the costs, in the Magistrate's court, the plaintiff has succeeded in recovering part of his property, and he is entitled to costs. The appeal will be allowed with costs, and the Magistrate's court judgment altered to one declaring the horses executable, but the cart and harness not executable.

HERMAN V. TYFIELD. { 1905.
Nov. 24th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for an interdict restraining the respondent, F. Tyfield, from trespassing on the property of the petitioner, at Hiddingh Avenue, Mill-street. The respondent had received leave to plaster a certain wall, but now he was tarring it, to which the petitioner objected.

Interdict granted, with leave to the respondent to move to set it aside.

SUPREME COURT

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

NANNUCCI, LTD. V. { 1905.
KEATING. Nov. 28th.
.. 29th.

This was an action brought by Nannucci, Ltd., of Cape Town, against Donis James Keating, of Cape Town, to recover the sum of £189 2s. 9d., alleged to be due as a result of certain transactions between the parties.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a company duly registered with limited liability under Act 25 of 1892 in this colony, and it carries on business in Cape Town and elsewhere; the defendant resides and carries on business in Cape Town.

2. In or about March, 1904, the defendant, who was then in partnership with certain persons named Isodore Sangiorgio and Locurzio, took over in his own name and interest the business of the partnership, including certain liabilities to the plaintiff company who had financed the said partnership.

3. The plaintiff company, subject to the stipulations in paragraph 4 hereof, agreed to this arrangement, and agreed at the request and for the accommodation of the defendant to advance further moneys to the defendant in accordance with the requirements of his business (and otherwise), and more particularly in connection with a certain contract whereunder defendant had to erect buildings in connection with the Nazareth House for the Sisters of Nazareth in Cape Town.

4. The plaintiff company further, subject to the said stipulations, leased to the defendant certain premises at 98, Long-street, Cape Town, and provided clerical assistance for the purposes of defendant's business at a weekly charge of £2.

5. The said company stipulated that the moneys which should become due to defendant under the said building contract should be paid direct to the plaintiff company in part payment of advances made by the plaintiff company under the aforesaid arrangement, and of any other moneys which the defendant might from time to time owe plaintiff; and the plaintiff further stipulated that the defendant should pay interest at the rate of one per centum per mensem on the amount of the balance of his indebtedness from time to time.

6. The defendant on the 10th March, 1904, by letter, gave the necessary authority to the Mother Superior (acting for and on behalf of the Sisters of Nazareth), to pay all moneys due under the building contract to Oreste Nannucci who was then the managing director of the plaintiff company. The said Nannucci as such managing director received the said moneys till payment thereafter was stopped as hereinafter set forth.

7. Thereafter for a period of 35 weeks till the 31st October, 1904, the defendant occupied the office and received the clerical assistance aforesaid.

8. The plaintiff company further prior to the said date supplied sand for the defendant's business, and rendered service in cartage of the sand, all at defendant's special instance and request, for the sum of £58 3s. 6d., the price specially agreed to between the parties.

9. On the 31st October, 1904, the defendant had incurred liability to plaintiff in the sum of £3,494 11s. 1d. for liabilities outstanding at the date of the agreement aforesaid, and for moneys which plaintiff, from time to time, advanced under the agreement aforesaid, and at defendant's special instance and request, and for rental and clerical assistance and for sand and cartage, and for interest due all as aforesaid. At the said date the plaintiff had received on account of defendant sums amounting in all to £3,211 11s. 10d. Accounts showing full particulars of the matters in this paragraph referred to have been duly rendered to defendant.

10. On or about the 31st October, 1904, the parties hereto agreed that in lieu of the charge of £2 per week for rent and clerical assistance the defendant should pay £5 a month as and for rent of the office alone. This arrangement remained until terminated by defendant in February, 1905.

11. On the 31st October, 1904, the defendant owed the sum of £282 18s. 3d. to plaintiff, for which plaintiff held a promissory note, signed by defendant, for £213 8s. 2d. in respect of certain amounts due originally to Nannucci and Gaslioli, which amount has since been paid by defendant under judgment of this Court.

12. Since the 31st October, 1904, the defendant has become further indebted to plaintiff for advances made similar to those made prior to the said date. Particulars of his said further indebtedness are set forth in annexure B hereto.

13. The defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £189 2s. 9d., as balance by reason of the premises.

14. On the 14th February, 1905, the defendant wrongly and unlawfully directed the Mother Superior aforesaid to make no further payments to plaintiff, under and by virtue of the letter in annexure A set forth. The defendant was at that date still largely indebted to plaintiff under the agreement aforesaid.

15. On the 16th March, 1905, the Mother Superior aforesaid was ordered to pay into Court the sum of £200, being the balance due to the said building contract with the defendant, the said payment in Court to abide the further order of this honourable Court.

16. The plaintiff company has in its possession 42 barrels of cement belonging to defendant, which it hereby tenders to deliver to defendant as against payment of the balance herein claimed.

17. All things have happened, all conditions have been fulfilled, and all times have elapsed necessary to enable the plaintiff to claim the said sum of £189 2s. 9d., but the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully fails and neglects to pay any part thereof, though repeatedly requested so to do.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) Payment of the sum of £189 2s. 9d., balance due as aforesaid, plaintiff tendering delivery of 42 barrels of cement as aforesaid; (b) an order directing that the said sum of £200 in the hands of the Registrar of this Court be paid out to plaintiff in satisfaction pro tanto of the aforesaid sum and the costs of this action, and of proceedings in this honourable Court relative to the said sum of £200; (c) interest a tempore morae; (d) alternative relief; (e) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. Defendant admits the allegations in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the declaration, save and except that he says that the words, "in accordance with the requirements of his business (and otherwise) and more particularly," in paragraph 3 should be deleted, and further, that the following words should be added at the end of the last line of the 5th paragraph, to wit: "Arising out of or in connection with the said contract referred to in paragraph 3 of the declaration."

2. In reference to the allegations in paragraph 7, he says that he agreed to pay £2 per week in respect of the office and the clerical assistance therein referred to only during the time his contract with the Sisters of Nazareth was continuing, which contract terminated on 30th September, 1904, up to which date he admits he is liable for the sum of £2 per week, amounting in all to £62 in respect of 31 weeks; otherwise, he denies the allegations in the said paragraph.

3. He says that he agreed to accept sand, and the cartage thereof from and by plaintiff company at the same price at which he was receiving supplies and delivery from other persons, at which rate plaintiff company is entitled to the sum of £37 6s., in respect of sand actually carted and delivered, otherwise he denies the allegations in paragraph 8.

4. On 31st October, 1904, he says he admits that he was indebted to plaintiff company in the sum of £3,232 5s. 5d., and further sum of £213 8s. 2d. in respect of certain indebtedness of Nannucci and Gaslioli, assumed by defendant and secured by the promissory note referred to in paragraph 11 of the declaration, the details of which former sum will appear from the annexure hereto, to which defendant craves leave to refer. At the said date plaintiff company had received on account of defendant sums amounting to £3,211 12s. 10d., save as is herein stated defendant denies the allegation in paragraph 9.

5. He admits that he occupied the office during January and February, 1905, under an agreement whereby he undertook to pay £5 per month as and for rent, but otherwise denies paragraph 10.

6. He admits that he paid the promissory note under judgment of this Court, but as to the other allegations in paragraph 11 he refers to the allegations in paragraph 4 hereof.

7. He says that he admits that he became indebted to plaintiff subsequently to 31st October in the sums shown in detail in the annexure hereto; but otherwise he denies the allegations in paragraph 12, and craves leave to refer to the annexure hereto, but in especial in respect of the items, £75 6s. 3d. and £23 14s. 7d., appearing in the said account; he says he does not admit the correctness of the amounts, and further says they are claimed in respect of certain flour, which said flour, however, was imported by O. Z. Nannucci, and not by plaintiff company, and was so imported on behalf of O. Z. Nannucci and defendant as partners, and that plaintiff company is not entitled to claim in respect thereof in this action, and even if plaintiff company is so entitled to claim (which he denies), he says that he (defendant) is not personally and solely liable therefor.

8. He says that prior to the issue of summons he tendered to pay the sum of £62 14s., which is in excess of the amount to which plaintiff company is entitled, as shown by the account hereunto annexed, but notwithstanding, he is willing and herein again tenders to pay the aforesaid sum of £62 14s.

9. He admits the allegations in paragraphs 14 and 15, save that he denies that he acted wrongfully and unlawfully, but says that he was compelled to act as in the former paragraph 14 stated, in order to prevent plaintiff obtaining wrongfully and unlawfully a larger amount than he was entitled to out of the defendant's moneys.

10. He says that he purchased certain barrels of cement from plaintiff, but in or about December, 1904, plaintiff wrongfully and unlawfully refused to deliver them to him, and thereby he became entitled to and did treat the contract of purchase and sale as rescinded; he denies that plaintiff is in possession of 42 barrels of cement belonging to him.

11. He admits that he refuses to pay the sum of £189 2s. 9d., or any other sum than that hereinbefore tendered, but otherwise denies the allegations in paragraph 17. Wherefore, save as is herein tendered, he prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. Swift) for plaintiffs; Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Struben) for defendant.

Some argument took place as to whether the accounts should be referred to a referee for report, but eventually it was decided to proceed with the case.

Oreste Zachariah Nannucci, managing director of Nannucci Ltd., said that in March, 1904, Keating came in as a partner with two Italians, whom witness was supporting in carrying out a contract at Nazareth House. Keating afterwards paid out the other partners, and witness agreed to support him, it being arranged that all moneys were to be paid to witness. The firm continued to make advances, and to do all his clerical work, and he was also given a room as an office, for which a sum of £2 a week was charged. They bought a large plant for building, including a portable railway, two brick kilns, and other materials. The firm advanced money in connection with the building of a house for Mr. Fillis, and a number of personal advances were made to the defendant. These were outside the Nazareth House contract. The secretary of the company devoted nearly all his time to keeping the books. Keating went to England, and afterwards witness also went to England, and in London there was a proposition that he and defendant should form a partnership in certain matters. Some flour was ordered in connection with the partnership. Upon their return, they tendered for four or five jobs unsuccessfully, and it was then (in December) agreed that Keating should take over the concerns, and that they should have no further transactions together. The Nazareth House contract was finished in October. The firm continued to keep the books up to November, but only charged up to the termination of the Nazareth House contract. It was originally arranged that the bank interest should be charged on the advances, and that the firm should take half the profits. A signboard (Keating and Co.) was put up outside the office, and the cost of this—£3—was one of the items claimed for. This was paid for before the partnership ended, and was one of the matters for which the defendant was liable, as he took over everything. The flour transaction was taken over by Keating. The latter afterwards asked him to finance him in the flour transaction, but witness refused. When the bill became due, he again came to witness, and asked him to assist him, but he refused. Ultimately, however, witness agreed to give him a cheque for £73 from Nannucci Ltd. That was on the 28th December, and the flour did not arrive until February. In January there was a quarrel, owing to the defendant suing a party for a debt, after witness had been given to understand that the matter had been fixed up. The witness proceeded to depose as to certain correspondence, and went in detail through other items referred to in the declaration.

The witness was cross-examined at length by Mr. Benjamin regarding arrangements made in conversation, and the relations at different times between the parties.

Postea (November 29th).

Mr. Benjamin intimated that an agreement had been arrived at between the parties.

[Hopley, J.: I am very pleased to hear it.]

Mr. Close said that the terms of the settlement were that the defendant should pay to plaintiff the sum of £100, instead of the £69 he had tendered, together with the costs of this and previous proceedings, and that the £200 deposited in court should be released and paid to the plaintiff for that purpose.

Judgment was entered accordingly.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GOW V. STEWARDS, AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. { 1905.
Nov. 29th.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved, on behalf of the petitioner, who is the general superintendent of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, for an order directing the stewards of the church at West London to deliver up the keys of the church, and to show cause why they should not acknowledge the Rev. A. A. Morrison as the proper pastor, who had been appointed at the Beaufort West Conference to take the place of the Rev. Mr. Spawn.

The respondents were ordered forthwith to deliver up the keys of the church, and to be interdicted from obstructing the services to be held by the Rev. Mr. Morrison until December 12, and a rule issued calling upon them to show cause by the 12th December why they should not be interdicted in future from obstructing the services conducted by Mr. Morrison.

PATERSON V. HEYDENRYCH.

This was an action brought by James E. A. Paterson, broker of Cape Town, to recover from Benjamin Heydenrych the sum of £75, which the plaintiff alleged the defendant agreed to pay on a certain settlement.

The declaration set out that the plaintiff was a broker and agent, of Cape Town, and the defendant was also of Cape Town. In April, 1904, plaintiff and one Reginald C. de Heton were in partnership, and the partnership had a claim against one Louis Pitt and Wm. Twine on two promissory notes, amounting to £155. Judgment was taken out against Pitt, who approached Attorney Steer with a view to negotiations. The defendant was also a creditor of Pitt's. It was agreed between Steer, Pitt, and Heydenrych that De Heton should receive from Pitt a covering bond for his half-share. The defendant, it was further arranged, was also to receive a covering bond, ranking prior to De Heton's, for a sum sufficient to cover Pitt's indebtedness to him, and an additional £75, which he agreed to advance to enable Pitt to pay out Paterson, who declined to accept anything but a settlement. It was further agreed that so soon as a promissory note to Heydenrych and the covering bonds had been passed, the defendant was to pay the sum of £75 to Steer for the plaintiff. At an interview Steer, at the plaintiff's request, asked the defendant to hand over the cheque for £75, and the defendant refused until the documents were signed. Subsequently the documents were signed and completed, but the defendant declined to fulfil his part of the agreement. In consideration of the defendant's promise, the plaintiff stayed all further proceedings against Pitt, and had now lost his remedy, as both the defendant and De Heton had covering bonds, and Pitt's estate had become insolvent. Plaintiff claimed £75, with interest and costs.

The plea set out that about the end of April Pitt, who, in conjunction with his wife, was indebted to the defendant on three notes, amounting to £205 5s., applied to the defendant for a loan of £75, wherewith to discharge his liability to the plaintiff. The defendant agreed, on condition Pitt signed a note for the amount owing to the defendant interest thereon to the 1st June, 1904, interest due on a certain note for £105, and the said sum of £75 to be lent—in all, for £380 9s.; further, that the amount of the note be paid on the 1st June, 1904, and that Pitt and his wife should pass a covering bond to the defendant to rank prior to that of De Heton. It was further agreed, if the note was not paid on the due date, Pitt should pay £15 per month, or part of a month, as interest. The defendant denied he entered into the agreement as stated by the plaintiff. The note was not paid at its due date, and in August, when it was overdue, Steer applied to defendant for payment of £75, and the defendant refused to recognise plaintiff's right to receive any money from him, but expressed his willingness to pay to Pitt the sum of £45, being the balance of £75, after deduction of two months' interest agreed upon against receipt of the bond and the promissory note duly signed. The plaintiff had ample opportunity of taking action against Pitt before his insolvency. The balance of £45 had been appropriated by the defendant towards payment of interest on the note for £380 9s. Defendant prayed that the plaintiff's claim be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) for plaintiff; Mr. Burton for defendant.

James Edward Alexander Paterson stated that in April last he was carrying on business with De Heton. The firm held two bills made by Pitt to the amount of £155. About the end of April judgment was given against Pitt. On the 30th April the partnership was dissolved. Pitt approached witness, and subsequently witness met the defendant at Steer's office, when there were present De Heton and Steer. The defendant agreed to take a covering bond and a promissory note for money owing by Pitt, and Mr. De Heton also agreed to take a covering bond and a promissory note for his half-share. Seventy-five pounds was to be paid by the defendant to Mr. Steer for witness's half-share. At that time witness insisted on payment in cash, and there was no mention of the amount of Pitt's indebtedness to the defendant. The defendant agreed to pay the £75 to Mr. Steer for witness. If the £75 had not been secured in that way, witness would have pushed Pitt for the money, and he believed he would have got it. Witness refused to accept £45 after he had written several letters to Mr. Steer. Mr. Pitt's estate had since been assigned. Witness had not been paid his £75 or any part of it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The reason he pressed Pitt into court was to have all the accounts in before the dissolution of partnership. Witness did not pay the expenses of passing the bond. Subsequent to the arrangement Mr. Steer asked the defendant for witness's cheque, and he replied that he would furnish it when the documents were signed. The arrangement was not that Heydenrych was to advance the £75 to Pitt. Witness heard there was some delay in signing the note and passing the bond.

Arthur Wallace Steer, attorney, who acted for Paterson and De Heton, and recovered judgment against Pitt on two promissory notes, stated at the meeting in his office it was agreed that the defendant was to advance for payment to Paterson £75, that he was to take a covering bond for £500 to cover this advance and previous indebtedness due to him by Mrs. Pitt and Pitt himself, and De Heton was to get a covering bond for his half-share, plus interest, and that De Heton's bond was to be subsequent to that of the defendant. Witness took it that all parties understood the arrangement. Upon that proceedings against Pitt were stayed. The delay in passing the bonds was due to some delay in signing the bill between Pitt and Heydenrych.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: When the £45 was offered by the defendant, witness did not remember him saying that that was the utmost he could give to Pitt.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: It was clearly understood in the original arrangement that the defendant was to pay witness £75 for the plaintiff.

Louis Pitt gave corroborative evidence as to what took place at the interview.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Vincent Alexander van der Byl, attorney for the defendant, said that Mr. Orpen called upon him in reference to the mortgage bond, and said that before they could pass transfer, Mr. Heydenrych would have to release the bond. Witness told Mr. Orpen he would have to consider the matter, as it might prejudice Heydenrych in the case then pending in regard to the transaction. Subsequently witness told Mr. Orpen that he did not think, under the circumstances, it would prejudice Heydenrych, and the latter then, upon witness's advice, signed the release.

Benjamin J. Heydenrych, the defendant, said he had certain promissory notes made in his favour by Pitt and his wife, prior to 1904. Some were made in favour of Twine, but witness held them all. They amounted to £205 5s. Pitt wrote witness in April, and afterwards called on him at Observatory, and asked for a loan of £500. This was about the 20th April. Witness refused to make the loan. Towards the end of the month Pitt called and asked for a loan of £75, saying it was to pay off a debt to Paterson and De Heton, and that the former wanted the money, and the latter had agreed to take a bond. Witness said that if Pitt showed him the property he would consider the matter. Witness saw the properties, and agreed to advance the money if Pitt would give a bond covering all his indebtedness. He asked Pitt if there were any other creditors, saying that if there were it might be undue preference. Pitt assured him there were no other creditors. Witness gave him the note, and read it to him, and told him to take it home and read it to his wife. Witness stipulated that the money must be paid at the due date; otherwise, that interest should be paid at the rate of £15 per month, or part. Pitt did not bring the note back. The first witness heard of the note being signed was in July, when Mr. Steer told him the note had been signed and the bond passed. He asked witness for the £75. Witness said he was not going to give Pitt the money, as the promissory note was two months overdue. Steer said he would get the bond, but witness said the bond was no good to him. Witness said the most he would do would be to deduct two months' interest and pay £45. Mr. Steer said his client expected the money, but witness said he had nothing to do with Paterson. Witness did not remember the meeting referred to in Steer's office. He never agreed to give the £75 to Paterson. A couple of days before he got the demand he met Paterson, who said Pitt's estate was assigned. Witness said: "I am sorry for you, and I am sorry for myself, because we will both lose our money." This was in April. Witness signed the deed of assignment. He was a creditor of Pitt's independently of this. At that time Paterson seemed perfectly resigned, and said nothing about the claim for £75. Witness had made no claim on the estate in respect of the bond, or the new promissory notes.

Mr. Searle: You signed the deed of assignment, as a mortgagee? You saw the heading "mortgagees" on the deed?

Witness: I did not look at that. I simply signed after the last name that was on the paper.

You see there is a special list for mortgagees, and a special list for concurrent creditors?—That must have been put in afterwards.

Do you say you did not know you were signing as a mortgagee?—I didn't know that. I simply signed after the last name before me.

In further cross-examination, witness said he knew Paterson would not take a bond, and that he wanted the £75 in cash.

Mr. Searle: Pitt came to you because he was in difficulties? You knew he was in these difficulties?—He told me he wanted the £75.

You don't deny that you knew of these difficulties. People don't pay you 45 per cent. for money unless they are in difficulties?—He paid 60 per cent. to Paterson.

We haven't had that. We have it that he paid £2 10s. a month. There is no suggestion made that that is so, and you should not say so. Do you deny that you knew Pitt was in great difficulties? Do you suggest he was going to pay you between 45 and 50 per cent. interest if he were not in difficulties?—He came to me and asked me for a loan of £75 to square off Paterson, as there was a dissolution of the partnership, and they wanted the money.

And I put it to you he told you that there would be judgment, and his goods would be attached unless you advanced the money? That is what Mr. Steer, Pitt, and Paterson say?—No, no; he did not tell me anything of the kind.

You won't deny being present in Mr. Steer's office when Pitt, Paterson, and Mr. Steer were there?—I won't deny it, but I don't see why I should go there.

Further cross-examined, witness said he told Mr. Steer he did not want the bond.

Re-examined by Mr. Burton: The £15 per month interest was not on account of the £75 only.

Reginald Charles de Heton, a former partner in the firm of Paterson and De Heton, deposed that the arrangement with regard to the debt of Pitt to the firm, was that it should be divided, Paterson to be paid out by Pitt, and witness to get a bond. Witness understood from Pitt that he was going to get the money from Mr. Heydenrych. Witness remembered a meeting at which Heydenrych, Steer, and Paterson were present. The defendant said he was willing to advance the money to Pitt, and that would go to pay Paterson's share; and that witness was to have a bond, which would rank after Heydenrych's, he (Heydenrych) having had previous transactions, which the bond would cover. Witness did not remember whether Pitt was at the meeting he had referred to; he did not think so.

Mr. Pitt (recalled) said he took the deed of assignment to certain of the creditors. Before he obtained the signatures, the words "mortgagees" and "concurrent creditors" were on the deed.

Malcolm Powrie said the words were on the document before the signatures were made.

Mr. Burton closed his case.

Mr. Burton, in the course of argument, said much was made in these cases of the apparently exorbitant interest. That question did not enter much into this case, and he would only say that here was exemplified the fact that the interest was not so great as it appeared. In many of these instances the security given for the advances was very low, and the person who advanced the money ran so much risk of losing the capital and the interest, that the large interest should not strike one as so very reprehensible. In this particular case that was exemplified.

Mr. Searle was not heard.

Maasdorp, J., said the whole of the case really depended upon what occurred at Mr. Steer's office, and with respect to that the conflict of evidence created really no difficulty in so far as the decision of the case was concerned, because on the one side the Court had the evidence of witnesses who stated what actually occurred at the meeting, and the only real contradiction there was was that of the defendant, who said that he was not present at such a meeting. It was not difficult to dispose of the evidence of the defendant in that respect, because it was impossible to doubt that there was this meeting, and that the defendant was present. It was an extraordinary lapse of memory—if such it could be called—because it appeared that the defendant remembered other little occurrences, and meetings with the parties in this case very clearly, but if he could be guilty of such a lapse of memory as that, then his evidence as to some other material points in the case would not be of very great value. His lordship proceeded to review the evidence, and said that the defendant's signature to the deed of assignment as a mortgagee amounted to an admission that he had accepted the mortgage bond in question. Here, then, was a statement in writing by the defendant that he was the holder of this mortgage bond. That disposed of the whole case. He (the learned Judge) found that the sum of £75 was due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and judgment would be given for that amount, with costs.

THE "STAG" LINE LTD. V. { 1905.
TABLE BAY HARBOUR { Nov. 30th.
BOARD. { Dec. 4th.

Harbour Board—Graving Dock—Demurrer.

The plaintiff company agreed with the defendants to hire the use of their Graving Dock for the purpose of painting one of plaintiffs' vessels, from March 27th. On that date plaintiffs were prepared to dock their vessel, but another vessel having meanwhile been placed on the slip, the plaintiff's ship was not docked till April 10th. Plaintiffs now claimed demurrage.

Held, that as, under all the circumstances, the Harbour Board had not been guilty of any avoidable or unreasonable delay, they were not liable for demurrage.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff company to recover £1,000 damages for wrongful detention.

The plaintiffs' declaration said that the company was duly registered in England, having its office at North Shields, and was the owner of sundry steamships. The plaintiffs were owners of the S.S. Clematis. About 20th March, 1901, the plaintiffs, by the agents at Cape Town of the said steamship, entered into an agreement with the defendants through the Dock Superintendent, subsequently specifically approved of by the Board, whereby the defendants undertook and agreed to take the Clematis into the Graving Dock for painting on the 27th March, 1901, upon the following terms and conditions.

1. The vessel shall be taken into the Graving Dock by and under the direction of such person as may be appointed thereto by the Board, in the presence of the master or his duly appointed representative.

2. So far as the vessel is declared by the person in charge to be properly placed on the blocks, the Master, or his duly appointed representative, shall forthwith satisfy himself thereof, and, failing to point out any defect in such placing to the superintendent or his representative, the vessel shall be considered to have been properly and safely placed on the blocks.

3. The Board shall not be liable for any damage which may be sustained by the vessel, and the vessel shall not be liable for any damage which may be sustained by the dock or its appurtenances, either in docking or undocking.

4. The Board shall not be responsible for any detention of vessels in the Graving Dock through stress of weather, disarrangement of machinery, block of work, or from any other cause whatever.

5. Every vessel using the Graving Dock will be charged at least one day's rent, in addition to the charge for docking and undocking.

6. Notice in writing must be given by the master or agent, when the vessel is ready for undocking, but such notice will not be accepted by the Superintendent until the vessel has finished her work, and the dock cleaned, cleared, and ready for flooding; if such notice is served before ten o'clock a.m., the day on which such notice is given, Sunday's excepted, will be considered the undocking day. Amongst the lawful regulations regarding the said Graving Dock made by the Board, under the Act aforesaid, was the following: "On failure to place a vessel in the Graving Dock or on the patent slip on the day appointed for that purpose, such vessel shall, if the dock or slip be required, lose her turn on the list, and the owner, master, or agent of such vessel shall be liable to pay to the Board the expenses, if any, which may have been incurred on preparing the dock or slip for her reception," and the said regulation was in contemplation of the parties to the aforesaid agreement and binding upon them. On March 23 an agreement on these terms was entered into between the defendant and persons representing a vessel named the Matabele, but the day appointed for the Matabele to be placed in the Graving Dock was the 24th March, 1901. The Matabele lost her turn, and was taken in on the 27th March in place of the Clematis. The Clematis was detained for fourteen days, and the plaintiff sustained damages in the sum of £1,000, in consequence of such detention and claimed that amount, with costs.

The defendants' plea denied that any agreement to take the Clematis into the Graving Dock for painting on the 27th March was entered into between the plaintiff and the Dock Superintendent, and that any such agreement was subsequently specially approved by the Board. On the 20th March, 1901, the Dock Superintendent signed the following document: "Terms on which the Table Bay Harbour Board engage to place the Clematis in the Graving Dock" on the following condition, which was signed by the agents of the plaintiff: "We agree to the above condition," and the document contains in the margin the words, "cleaning and painting only." Application to have the Matabele, which was represented as a vessel carrying mails, and as fitted as a passenger boat, dry-docked, was made prior to the month of March, 1901. The Matabele arrived in Table Bay on the 27th March. The dry dock was then partly occupied by a vessel lawfully and properly placed there previously. The Clematis required the whole dock, which was not available, whereas the Matabele only required that portion of the dry dock which was available. Defendants contended that they were not legally bound to take such other vessel out of the dry dock to make room for the Clematis. The Matabele was placed in the said portion of the dry dock on the 27th March, and remained there until the 9th April. They denied that the plaintiffs had any legal right to claim that the Clematis should be docked on the 27th of March, or for the fourteen days thereafter. The defendants denied that they were liable for any part of the sum claimed, and prayed that the plaintiffs' claim be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Close (with him Mr. D. Buchanan) for plaintiffs; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Bisset) for defendants.

Mr. Close read evidence taken on behalf of the plaintiffs on commission, bearing out the allegations made in the declaration.

Mr. Searle called

John Veall, shipping clerk in the employ of Messrs. Thomson, Watson and Co., agents for the steamer Matabele. He said he remembered receiving a letter in February, 1901, relative to the arrangements for dry-docking the Matabele in March. This was from Rennie and Sons, asking them to impress upon the authorities the necessity of dry-docking the Matabele, or otherwise the ship would have to cease to run, and the mail service would have to be stopped. Witness saw the Dock Superintendent and the letter was shown to the Dock authorities. On March 23, a telegram was read from Durban stating that the vessel had sailed from Natal, and was due to arrive on the 26th. Witness thereupon wrote notifying the Dock authorities. The Matabele arrived on the 27th, and it was found that she required somewhat considerable repairs—more than witness had supposed. She was in dock for nearly a fortnight, leaving on the 9th April. The firm agreed to pay from the 25th March. This was because they originally engaged the dock from the 25th. The vessel carried the East Coast mails during the war. On the 27th, the conditions were signed.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: Captain Stephen told him the dock would be available on the 25th; witness looked upon that arrangement—made on the 23rd—as binding. Witness held that they had engaged the dock from the 25th until the vessel arrived and had been repaired. It was expected before the arrival of the vessel that the repairs would be completed in a couple of days. He considered on the morning of the 27th that the vessel was going in under the arrangement that the dock was at their disposal from the 25th.

Wm. Stephen, Port Captain and Dock Superintendent in Table Bay, said that when the Clematis came in, the Bay and Docks were very congested; over forty vessels were waiting to be docked, some of which had been waiting for months. The Goodwin arrived on the 11th January, and came into dock on the 2nd March, being berthed outside another vessel. She had afterwards to be shifted to the entrance to the Graving Dock, where she remained until the 4th April. If it had not been for the Matabele, witness would have had her shifted from the Graving Dock entrance. Ordinarily she would not have stood in the way of vessels being dry-docked. Application was made to dock the Clematis, but witness never at any time stated that she should get in before the Matabele. No particular date was stated. He could not recollect exactly what took place; but, presumably, when he was approached on the matter, he said the Clematis would be docked as soon as possible. Witness never fixed dates for a vessel going into dock; he always made the condition, "if possible." Witness never said the dock was engaged for the Clematis on the 27th March. Some time previously he had been approached in reference to the Matabele. He believed the last witness showed him the letter from the Matabele's owners. He did not give the Clematis the dock on the 25th, because he knew the Matabele was coming, and would, in the ordinary course, arrive shortly. Furthermore, to prepare the dock for the Clematis would involve expense, and take some time, as she required the whole dock, and the Goodwin would have to be shifted and other preparations made. The Matabele required only half the dock. Witness had no knowledge until the Matabele was in the docks that the repairs would take so long. If he had thought the repairs would take nine or ten days, he would possibly have made different arrangements. Witness considered it a case where more than ten days should be given. He acted for the best in the interests of everyone. The terms of the Clematis's charter party were never mentioned to witness.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: Witness did not take up an altogether official attitude over the docking of the ship; he denied that he fixed a date for the docking of any ship.

Mr. Searle closed his case, and counsel were heard in argument on the facts.

Cur. Adr. Vult.

Postea (December 4th).

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff company allege in their declaration that on March 20, 1901, they entered into an agreement with the defendants, whereby the defendants undertook to place their ship (the Clematis) in the Graving Dock of the Table Bay Harbour for cleaning and painting on March 27, upon the terms and conditions contained in the printed form of contract, which was duly signed by all the necessary parties. The plaintiffs were on the appointed day prepared to place their ship in the dock, but the defendants failed to take her in, and delayed doing so until April 10. They now claim as damages sustained by them, by reason of the delay of fourteen days, the sum of £1,000. It appears there was a prior undertaking on the part of the Harbour Board to place another ship (the Matabele) in the Graving Dock on March 25. That ship did not arrive until the 27th, when she was docked, and she was not undocked until March 9. It was the presence of the Matabele in the Graving Dock which prevented the Clematis going in. And in anticipation of this fact being set up as a legal impediment to docking the Clematis on the 27th, the plaintiffs proceed to state that upon the failure of the Matabele to go into the Graving Dock on March 25, which was the day appointed for the purpose, she lost her turn on the list in accordance with Regulation No. 45, sub-section D of the Harbour Board. It is alleged that if this regulation had been observed, the Graving Dock would have been available for the Clematis on March 27. The defendants deny that they agreed to place the Clematis in the Graving Dock on March 27, and say that the dock was not available for that ship until April 10, being occupied by the Matabele until that day, but they admit that they engaged to place the Clematis in the dock in terms of the printed document which was put in at the trial. The first point to decide is whether there was a definite agreement on the part of the defendants to dock the Clematis on the 27th. It appears from the evidence of Captain Stephen, the Dock Superintendent, that when he was approached in the matter by the agents of the ship, which had not then arrived, he entered into the agreement mentioned, pointing out to the agents that he had already undertaken to place the Matabele in the dock on March 25, and he was under the impression that she would be disposed of in a couple of days, in which event the dock would be available for the Clematis. He says he never definitely undertook to dock the latter ship on the 27th. This is the only direct evidence in respect of the terms of the agreement at the time it was entered into, the agent who made the contract on behalf of the ship not having been called at the trial. Captain Stephen said he never enters into an engagement by which he undertakes to put any vessel on an appointed day out of the dock to make room for another, and he did not do so on this occasion. I am bound, under the circumstances, to take the evidence of Captain Stephen as conclusive upon this point, there being no direct contradiction of it. Captain Stephen is supported in his statement by a passage in a letter written by the agents of the Clematis on April 1, to the following effect: "The steamer Clematis arrived here on the 24th ult., the Dry Dock having been booked by the Matabele from the 25th, which latter steamer we were informed would leave the dock again on the 27th ult." There is no pretence here that the 27th was fixed in express terms as the day for the docking of the Clematis. In the printed undertaking no date is fixed. I come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that there was an agreement to place the Clematis in the dock on the 27th. The defendants undertook, on the 20th, to place the Clematis in the dock, and I am of opinion that they then entered into a binding contract to do what was required within a reasonable time, having regard to the regulations of the Harbour Board and the ordinary course of business at the port. These agreements are entered into in contemplation of the regulations and the ordinary course of business at the port. It would appear that in the ordinary course, it would be reasonable to expect that a ship would be docked within such time as the necessary arrangements can be made if the dock is available, or so soon after as the dock becomes available. Independently of the consideration of the further question raised by the plaintiffs, which I still have to deal with, it would seem that the Matabele, which had a prior claim, and had to be disposed of, occupied the dock until April 9. The work on the Matabele took longer than was anticipated, and the dock was not available for the Clematis until April 10, when she was actually docked. But it is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that in calculating the reasonable time within which the defendants should have carried out their undertaking to dock the Clematis, the alleged prior rights of the Matabele should not enter into the calculation, because she had, under the Harbour Board regulations, forfeited her claim to be docked through her failure to be placed in the Graving

Dock upon the appointed day. The regulation in question is to the following effect: "On failure to place a vessel in the Graving Dock on the day appointed for that purpose, such vessel shall, if the dock be required, lose her turn on the list, and the master shall be liable to pay to the Board the expenses, if any, which may have been incurred in preparing the dock for her reception." It seems to have been contemplated by the regulations that a book should be kept in which the names of vessels applying for the use of the Graving Dock should be entered, and that such vessels should be placed in the dock in the order in which they appear on the list, providing all the prescribed conditions were fulfilled. The above-mentioned rule provides for the forfeiture of this right of precedence under certain circumstances. It was contended for the plaintiffs that the moment the vessel fails to be placed in the dock on the appointed day she as a necessary consequence lost her place on the list, and the next vessel could claim the right to go in. If the regulations were strictly construed, a vessel would lose its turn on the list even where the failure to go into the dock arose from no fault on her part, and, indeed, when the failure was due to default on the part of the Harbour Board. That could never have been intended. The regulation seems to me to provide for a forfeiture of a right and for a penalty upon failure to enter the dock through default of any vessel as a matter of contract between the Harbour Board and that particular vessel, and in no direct concern under its contract of any other vessel on the list. In the analogous case of forfeiture provided by contract, the rule is that a forfeiture of rights should not be too readily assumed, and in this case, I think, it was in the discretion of the Dock Superintendent to take into consideration all the circumstances before he pronounced that the Matabele had lost her right to go into dock. I can find nothing in the evidence to show that he exercised his discretion in an unreasonable manner, even if it were in the jurisdiction of the Court to interfere with his discretion, a point which it is unnecessary to decide. I am of opinion that the Harbour Board placed the Clematis in the Graving Dock in such reasonable time as they had by their contract undertaken to do, when they put her in after the dock was vacated by the Matabele on April 9. That being my view of the case, it is unnecessary to decide whether the measure of damages contended for in the declaration is the correct measure to apply in a case like the present. Judgment must be given for the defendants, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

RIX V. SEARLE AND VON WITT. 1905.
Dec. 1st.

This was an application to have the second respondent interdicted from carrying on business as a draper in the same building as the applicant, in breach, it was alleged, of a lease, and for an order calling on the first respondent to show cause why he should not be restrained from letting the premises at the corner of Frere-street and Victoria-road, Woodstock, as a draper's shop. In the lease which the applicant entered into with the former owner, John Henry Pfuhl, there was a clause that the lessor should not let a shop in the same building for a similar business to that of the applicant. Some months ago the second respondent opened a draper's business, known as the "Why go Further Store," and the applicant sought to establish his right under that lease.

Mr. Uington was for the applicant, Mr. Burton was for the first respondent, and Mr. Benjamin for the second respondent.

During argument,

Hopley, J. asked Mr. Benjamin if the parties could not fix on some measure of damages until the action was decided. Perhaps a sum of, say, £50 a month could be agreed upon as damages if applicant succeeded in his action.

Mr. Benjamin said that the usual procedure was to have an account taken.

[Hopley, J.: Then you may argue that it doesn't follow that people who bought at your client's shop would have gone to the other.]

Mr. Benjamin said he did not think that view had ever been taken by the English Courts.

Hopley, J., remarked that he thought the shortest way would be to argue on some measure of damages.

Mr. Benjamin argued that no case had been made out for the granting of an interdict. He contended that a contract between two parties could not be held as binding a third party who had taken a place innocently, and ignorant of the fact that there was such a contract. Mrs. Von Witt had made extensive preparations, and he urged it would be unjust now to compel her to close, when she had acted throughout without knowledge of any restriction.

Mr. Burton said the position of his client was an unfortunate one. He had purchased the property bona fide in the insolvency proceedings, subject to the two leases. He admitted he was bound by the lease, but he was helpless to do anything in the matter. He placed no obstacle in the way of carrying out the contracts, and, under the circumstances, he (Mr. Burton) submitted that costs should not be granted against him. It was true Mr. Searle was the landlord, but he had done nothing; he could do nothing. He was prepared to agree to the application for an interdict.

Hopley, J.: This is an interesting application, and very interesting points of considerable difficulty are raised by it, and it does seem to me it is very difficult to make any order at the present stage without possibly damaging the legal rights of some of the parties. It would appear that Mr. Pfuhl, who is now, I believe, insolvent, made a lease with Mr. Rix, who, for a very large rent, leased a shop and obtained a monopoly in the particular building to carry on the business of a draper. Subsequently to such lease Mr. Pfuhl seems to have entered into, with the Von Witts, another lease, the terms of which were drawn up by Mr. Von Witt, letting to him, for his wife, in general terms, a certain part of the building as a shop. Now, of course, Mr. Pfuhl ought in that to have seen that the restriction about not carrying on a draper's shop was imposed. It is said, but there is no affidavit on the point, that he drew the attention of the Von Witts to the terms of Rix's lease, and that they knew perfectly well that they could not carry on the business of a draper. Well, if that is so, it will very materially affect the result of any action hereafter brought by Rix against the Von Witts, but it is very difficult to say at present how that matter stands, because Mr. Pfuhl has not come forward, and the Von Witts have denied that any such notice was given them. As to Mr. Searle, his position is, as his counsel has said, one rather to be sympathised with than otherwise; yet he may find—I do not say he will, at present—that having purchased the property with the knowledge of these two leases, though they are not on the face of them inconsistent, but still of such a nature that they might at any future time become inconsistent if one of the lessees chooses to enforce his rights—he may find, in spite of being absolutely innocent in the matter, that having stepped into the shoes of the insolvent, he has an action for damages against him. I do not say there is a cause of action against him; I do not say there is not. I would not like to decide that point. But with regard to the Von Witts, it seems to me their being stopped must depend very largely on whether they had this notice. It is said they should be stopped whether they had notice or not, but I do not feel inclined, on an interlocutory motion, to give judgment on that somewhat complicated and important point, for they hired the shop on general terms, and they say they acted within their rights in using it as a draper's shop. Ought they under such circumstances to be interdicted from carrying on a business which is no longer in contemplation, but which is now, I understand, actually in existence as a going concern? Although Mr. Rix's right is clear in a certain way, the remedy does not seem to me to be equally clear—whether he can come to this court and ask for an injunction to stop the Von Witts carrying on a drapery business, or whether he is confined to an action for damages against somebody or other. Another point not so clear is whether he is suffering irreparable damage. As far as I can see it won't be beyond the powers of the Court, if the Von Witts are acting wrongly, to assess a sum of damages which will handsomely reward Rix. It seems to me it would be wiser to leave this matter for adjustment on a subsequent action for damages than to make a peremptory order closing up Von Witt's business, which it is quite possible Von Witt may establish a right to continue. I think, therefore, the balance of convenience would be not to grant the present application, but to leave the parties to decide the matter by action, suggesting that it should take place as soon as possible. The matter ought not to be delayed, because of course it is important to Mr. Rix, if he has the right he claims, that Mrs. Von Witt should cease to carry on the business, while, on the other hand, if Mrs. Von Witt has no right to be there, the damages will be running against her. There will, therefore, be no order on the present application. Costs will be costs in the cause.

FEBRUARY V. JOHNSON.

This was an action to compel the defendant to pay the purchase price and take transfer of certain property.

The declaration set forth that the plaintiff was a builder and contractor, and the defendant a barman. On the 13th July the parties entered into an agreement whereby the plaintiff agreed to sell and the defendant to purchase a certain piece of land, at Fairview, for the sum of £270, of which £250 was to be paid in cash against transfer and £20 to remain on a promissory note payable two months after the sale. Plaintiff had tendered transfer, but the defendant refused to take transfer, and to pay the purchase price. Judgment was claimed for the £270, and costs of transfer and of suit.

The defendant pleaded that there had been no sale. He said the plaintiff approached him, and there were negotiations which fell through. One McLeod, acting on behalf of the plaintiff, did offer him the property for £270, whereupon the defendant said he would consider it, and see whether he could raise the £250, and in case he was successful he might be able to purchase the ground for himself. He was unable to raise the money, and did not purchase the property.

Mr. Gardiner for plaintiff; Dr. Greer for defendant.

Simon Marcus, conveyancer, said he acted on behalf of February. He gave the defendant a refusal. The defendant offered £250 for the property, but finally he agreed, at a meeting in witness's office, to buy the ground for £270. Witness offered to make an arrangement with regard to a bond, but defendant said he had made arrangements for raising £250, and witness said the balance should remain on bond. He did not have the diagrams to put the agreement into writing. Witness repeated the arrangements to the defendant three times. On the 17th, witness wrote confirming the conversation. The money was not paid, and on the 26th July a letter of demand was sent to the defendant.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: Witness did not go to see the defendant with Christians before the 11th July. The defendant told witness that Mr. Maclay was giving him £250, and at the same time the defendant said he had £150 of his own. Witness had no doubt in his mind that the defendant understood he bought the property. Because he had not the diagrams, he did not put the bargain in writing. It was a usual practice in his office to send a letter of demand within three days if a purchaser failed to sign the documents.

Moses February (plaintiff) stated that Christians introduced him to the defendant with a view to a disposal of the property. The defendant was satisfied with the offer of £300, and told witness he would have to wait till Mr. Maclay saw the property. Subsequently the last witness was instructed to take £290 for the property.

Cross-examined by Dr. Greer: After Johnstone sent the letter offering £300, Mr. Maclay came out to see the property.

Rufus G. R. McLeod, attorney for the plaintiff, said he heard Marcus say to Johnson: "It is an understood thing that the price will be £270, £250 cash and a promissory note for £20." This he repeated later.

Mr. Gardiner closed his case.

Peter Johnson (the defendant) said that in June there were negotiations between witness and February for the purchase of the property. He went out and saw it, and February said he would take £350 for it. Witness said it was too much for him, but that he would see Mr. Maclay about it, with reference to raising a bond. Early in July witness saw Maclay, who went to see the property. Witness got a letter from Christians offering the property for £290. Before he saw Maclay, he wrote a letter offering February £300. On the 12th July witness saw Marcus, and told him that he must wait until witness had seen Mac-lay. On the 13th he went to Mc-Leod's office and saw Marcus. He told Marcus he had seen Maclay, but the latter had talked of giving £200. He said, however, that if Maclay would advance him £250, he would purchase for £270, and would pay the £20 by instalments. Marcus said he knew Maclay, and that it would be all right. He asked witness to sign the declaration, but witness said he could not, as he had not got the money. On the following Wednesday, Marcus and February came to the hotel to see witness. Witness said he was too busy, and that they were not to come to the hotel. Witness said they must wait until Maclay had decided. Witness refused to take a note which Marcus had, but the latter left it on the counter while witness was away tapping some beer. Next day witness sent his wife to McLeod's office to tell them that he had not agreed to purchase the land.

Cornelia Johnson, wife of the last witness, and Cornelius Christian gave evidence corroborating certain of the statements made by the defendant.

R. Maclay, farmer, said Johnston came to him in connection with the matter. He told Johnston he would give £200, but that it was not a property he would advise him to have anything to do with.

After hearing Dr. Greer in argument on the facts, and without calling upon Mr. Gardiner, Hopley, J., said they found in this country so frequently that professional men talked—he had almost said gabbled—over their business without being prudent enough to make a memorandum, which they could easily get initialled, embodying the terms of an agreement. They had it in their power to keep an office diary, which would frequently settle points, and save the Court many hours of work. They could easily put into writing the terms of any arrangement, instead of which they trusted to conversations and tricky memories, with the result that matters came before the Court, and there was a huge conflict of evidence, and a great waste of time. All he could say was that he wished to goodness he could see some sort of sign in this community of an improvement in regard to this, so that business should be carried on in a more proper, conventional, decent style. A prudent professional man would always, he thought, see he had writing. His Lordship proceeded to refer in detail to the evidence given in the case, and said that, after hearing the evidence, he had no doubt that the transaction was completed, and that the defendant did agree to buy the property. Judgment would be given for £270, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Acting Chief Justice, the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

FOURIE V. HENDRICKS. } 1905.
Dec. 4th.

This was an action to recover the cost of the keep of certain horses.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. Plaintiff resides at Cape Town, at which place defendant likewise resides, and carries on the business of a livery stable proprietor.

2. On or about August 23, 1905, plaintiff purchased and defendant sold for the sum of £85 a certain pair of horses, which he (defendant) warranted good and sound, and capable of doing Garlick's delivery work, that is to say, certain delivery of goods which plaintiff had contracted to perform for one Garlick.

3. Thereafter on or about August 24, 1905, plaintiff discovered that the said horses were not good or sound or capable of doing the said work, but on the contrary that the said horses were unsound in their legs, being able to stand only with difficulty the next morning after being driven for twelve or fifteen miles, one of them becoming quite stiff and walking with great difficulty, and the other having his off foreleg much swollen, both animals being unfit for use.

4. By reason of the breach of warranty aforesaid plaintiff became entitled to return the said horses to defendant, and to receive repayment of the purchase price; and on or about August 25 he did so tender the said horses, but defendant wrongfully and unlawfully refused to receive them or return the said purchase price.

5. Plaintiff has incurred on and since August 24 aforesaid, and is still incurring expense in the maintenance of the said horses at the rate of eleven shillings per day.

6. Plaintiff is still willing, and herein tenders to re-deliver to defendant the said horses upon satisfaction of his claim herein.

Alternatively the plaintiff says:

7. He craves leave to refer to paragraphs 1, 5, and 6 hereof.

8. On or about August 23, 1905, he purchased and defendant sold a certain pair of horses for the sum of £85.

9. Thereafter on or about August 24, 1905, he discovered that the said horses were not sound of limb, and that the next morning, after being driven for twelve or fifteen miles, they could stand only with difficulty, one of them having become quite stiff and walking with great difficult, and the other having his off foreleg much swollen, both animals being unfit for use.

10. The fact that the said horses were so unsound in limb was at the time of the purchase latent and unknown to plaintiff.

11. By reason of the said unsoundness plaintiff was entitled to return the said horses to defendant, and to receive payment of the purchase price, and on or about August 25, he did so tender the said horses, but defendant wrongfully and unlawfully refused to receive them or to return the said purchase price.

Wherefore, subject to the tender hereinbefore made, plaintiff prays:

(a) Judgment for the sum of £85, together with a sum in respect of the maintenance of the said horses calculated at the rate of eleven shillings per day from the 24th August inclusive. (b) Interest a tempore morae; (c) alternative relief, together with (d) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraph 1 of the declaration.

2. As to paragraph 2 thereof, he admits the said sale, but denies the alleged guarantee. He says that the plaintiff purchased the said horses after having carefully examined them, and that, in reply to an inquiry by the plaintiff as to their condition, the defendant informed him that he would give no guarantee, but sold the animals as they then were.

3. The defendant has no personal knowledge of the allegations contained in paragraph 3 of the declaration, and puts the plaintiff to the proof of them.

4. As to paragraph 4, he admits the said tender and his refusal to accept it, but otherwise denies the said paragraph.

5. He has no knowledge of the matters pleaded in paragraph 5.

6. As to the plaintiff's alternative claim, the defendant craves leave generally to refer to and repeat the allegations above set forth.

7. He specially denies paragraph 10 thereof, and says that even if it be true, as alleged, that the horses were subsequently found to be unsound, it was clearly understood and agreed at the time of the said purchase that the said horses were sold as they then were, and that the defendant would not be responsible for any defects which might subsequently be discovered in them.

Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Sutton) for plaintiff; Mr. Burton for defendant.

Jonathan Adrian Fourie (plaintiff) said that some time ago he secured a cartage contract from Messrs. Garlick. He called on the defendant, and witness agreed to take two horses, provided that they were useful, as well as ornamental. Witness asked whether Hendricks guaranteed the horses, and the latter replied: "If I do business with a gentleman, I always like him to come back to me." Witness purchased the horses. Two gentlemen of the S.P.C.A. drew his attention to a splint on the gelding's near leg, which they said would not affect the horse. Witness was practically satisfied, and bought the horses. Witness wanted to give a postdated cheque for the carriage, and the defendant said he would like to have a cheque in date for the horses. Subsequently he found that something was wrong with the horse, and he stopped payment of the postdated cheque; but as it had been parted with to a third party, he had to pay up. The horses were sent from Rosebank to Cape Town and back, and next morning he found the gelding lame and the mare stiff. Witness had not been able to use the horses, and from the 9th September to 30th November he paid 5s. per day for the stalling of the horses. Witness told the defendant the horses were no good, and the latter told him to bring them up and he would exchange them. Witness refused to do so, and on returning them, the defendant refused delivery.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: The gelding was not lame at present, but the mare was very stiff. He was of opinion that it would have been impossible for two S.P.C.A. officials, who were present at the time of the sale, to have heard the defendant say that he would not guarantee the animals. The horses left Cape Town in a landau for Rosebank on August 23, at 6.55, but at what time they were stabled that night he did not know.

John Forrest, M.R.C.V.S., Edinburgh, said that when he saw the animals next day after they arrived, he rejected them. On November 30 he drove the mare slowly from Rosebank, and when she reached the stables, she was much distressed.

Archibald Mitchell, in the employ of the plaintiff as manager to the stables, stated that he had stalled the plaintiff's horses at Rosebank from the 9th September to 30th November. His charge was 2s. 6d. per day per head. During the time witnesses had the horses the mare could not have been used; the gelding would have required a couple of months' rest. The mare was very unsound.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness rented the stables at Rosebank. He had no horses of his own at present. When witness saw them first they were unsound. Anyone that understood horseflesh must have known the horses were unsound. The gelding was limping, suffering from a sprained tendon, on the day it was delivered. Witness sent the gelding out to work that night, because the sprain might have not gone back on it.

Ahmed Allie, formerly in the employ of Hendricks, said he knew the horses in question. The gelding was lame, and the mare was stiff on her return from Messrs. Liberman and Buirski.

Cross-examined by Mr. Burton: Witness was not dismissed for taking two of Hendrick's whips.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

Jaberdien Hendricks, the defendant, denied that the plaintiff said he wanted horses to do Garlick's work. The plaintiff was satisfied with a trial drive, and witness refused to give a guarantee. The plaintiff accepted the horses without a guarantee. Witness never noticed anything wrong with the gelding in his stable. The mare usually did Liberman and Buirski's work, and there was nothing wrong with her. It was raining on the night the horses were sent to the plaintiff. When they were returned in three days they were all right.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Witness sold the horses as they were without a guarantee. When the horses were returned to him, as far as he could say, they were free from lameness.

Joel Bull, inspector, in the employ of the S.P.C.A., said he was at Hendrick's place with another inspector, when the plaintiff came up. After the horses had been driven around, Hendricks said he never guaranteed horses. At the request of the plaintiff, witness looked at the horses, and told him the horses were in fairly good condition. The splint was the only thing witness saw in the gelding, and the plaintiff said that did not matter if it was set.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Hendricks distinctly said after the cheque was paid that he would not guarantee the horses.

Fred Howcher, another inspector, gave similar evidence.

John Williams, a coloured man, formerly in the employ of Fourie, said that on August 23 Louis took the horses out of the stable at about seven o'clock, and did not return them until two the following morning.

Mr. Benjamin asked leave to call Louis on this point.

Louis said he was in the employ of Fourie. He remembered driving to Rosebank, and upon returning he outspanned. The last witness was then tipsy. Upon returning from taking the people to the theatre, he outspanned. He drove slowly back the second time, because the horses were stiff, and he arrived late at the station.

The witness Venter (recalled) said that he was at the stables when the horses were brought back on both occasions on the night referred to. The first time they came home after eight, and the second time between 12 and 1.

Mr. Benjamin having been heard in argument on the facts, the Court, without calling upon Mr. Burton, gave judgment for the defendant, with costs.

Buchanan, A.C.J., said that it was clear—even on the plaintiff's own evidence—that there was no warranty. But it was further contended that the defendant would still be responsible if at the time of sale there was a latent defect in the horses known to the seller. As to the gelding, he (the Acting Chief Justice) was inclined to say that the sprained tendon found afterwards by Mr. Forrest was the result of the use of the horses by the plaintiff that night, and that at the time of the sale the horse was sound but for the splint which was pointed out to the plaintiff before he bought. With regard to the mare, there was no evidence of the existence of rheumatism before the sale, and he did not think it was anything but what might reasonably be expected to find that after the mare's treatment on the night in question, she should have suffered as Mr. Forrest deposed she did when he examined her. There was an express repudiation of any warranty, and there was no knowledge proved on the part of the seller of any latent defect. Judgment would be for the defendant, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D).]

REX V. HAM AND OTHERS. { 1905.
Dec. 5th.

Betting-house—Act 36 of 1902—
Horse racing—Jockey Club of S. Africa.

The appellants authorized the use of a totalizator for purposes of betting at a race meeting held by them, but they had no licence from the Jockey Club of S. Africa and, although they professed in their advertisements of the race meeting to act under the rules and regulations of the Jockey Club, they allowed jockeys, who had been warned off the course, and horses which had been disqualified by the Jockey Club, to run at such race meeting, in contravention of such rules and regulations.

Held, that the appellants had been properly convicted of a contravention of the 16th section of Act 36 of 1902, and that they were not protected by the 21st section of the Act.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town, who had convicted Ham and a number of others of a contravention of Section 16 of Act 36 of 1902, in that on September 16 last they had wrongfully and unlawfully opened, kept, and used at or near Goodwood Park Estate a certain house or building, known as Goodwood Park Club, as a betting house or place within the meaning of Section 16 aforesaid.

Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Lewis) was for appellants; Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Burton said that the case shortly was this: It was proposed some time ago to start a racecourse at a place called Goodwood, which was some little distance out of Cape Town, on the way to the Paarl, on the main line. Several gentlemen, including a certain Mr. Martin, a broker in Cape Town, Mr. Ham, a well-known Johannesburg man, and others, banded themselves together, bought a certain property at Goodwood, invested a good deal of money in it, and formed themselves into a limited liability company for the purpose of promoting racing. They erected buildings and so forth, and eventually advertised a race meeting to be held. Their race meeting was advertised to be held under the Goodwood Park rules. It was then brought to their notice that the 21st section of this Betting Act exempted from liability for betting offences only such proceedings on racecourses as were conducted under the rules of the Jockey Club, and that their own rules could not entitle them to come within the exemption of that section.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I have read the record. I suppose you will admit that but for the 21st section there has been an infringement of the Act?]

Mr. Burton: Yes. I think so. The point is whether the exemption of the 21st section is an exemption only of such racing clubs as are under the control of the Jockey Club, i.e., as are licensed by the Jockey Club, or whether it is an exemption of racing clubs which conduct their racing in accordance with the racing rules of the Jockey Club. There is an important distinction between those two things. The real objection taken is that these people are not licensed by the Jockey Club. Therefore, they construe the exemption clause as meaning that the exemption is only granted to such race meetings as are licensed by the Jockey Club. Proceeding, counsel pointed out that since the Act was passed the headquarters of the Jockey Club, which were formerly at Port Elizabeth, had been removed to Johannesburg, and therefore were now beyond the jurisdiction.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is there no other statutory recognition of the Jockey Club than is contained in the Act of 1902?]

Mr. Burton said that he believed there was not.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the fact of the removal of the headquarters of the Jockey Club might be a reason for altering the 21st section.

Mr. Burton went on to contend that the exemption was given to bona-fide racing, which was carried on under the rules of the Jockey Club.

De Villiers, C.J., took the illustration of horses and jockeys disqualified by the Jockey Club, and put it to counsel whether the intention of Parliament was not that racing should be conducted fairly and honourably, and whether, if the Jockey Club warned a jockey off the course, and that jockey rode at a meeting not licensed by the club, that was not contrary, at all events, to the spirit of the Act.

Mr. Burton: We must then interpret the section as going so far as to say that no person shall be exempted unless he bets in a race which is held under the licence of the Jockey Club.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Ah, that may be the effect.]

Mr. Burton: Logically, my lord, I submit that we must go that length. One must go to the length of saying that Parliament meant to give the Jockey Club a monopoly of racing throughout South Africa.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did any jockeys ride at this meeting who had been warned off?]

Mr. Burton: No.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Any horses?]

A horse called Foxrock ran, which had been disqualified by the Jockey Club of South Africa. Counsel went on to say that the Jockey Club was more or less in the nature of a close corporation. It was very jealous of its own rights, of its own jurisdiction, and its own control. It was very jealous indeed of the control which it had exercised in the past over clubs licensed by it. According to Mr. Cloete's evidence, the objections really to the racing of the Goodwood Park Club was that this club was not licensed. Counsel proceeded to submit that the word "under" in the Act did not mean "under the control of." "Under" simply meant the same as "in accordance with." The Act did not say "any race which may be held under the licence of the Jockey Club." He contended that it was never intended by Parliament to give to the Jockey Club a monopoly of racing in South Africa. It was clear, he urged, that appellants had acted bona fide throughout.

[Do Villiers, C.J.: What was the ground of the disqualification of that horse?]

Mr. Burton said that he did not know why Foxrock was disqualified. He added, however, that the matter was not finally settled, as an appeal had been taken. Counsel went on to draw the Court's attention to the heavy penalties imposed by the Court below upon appellants, who had acted honestly and bona fide, with a view of testing the case. He also addressed the Court on behalf of the bookmakers and their clerks, in mitigation of sentence.

Without calling upon Mr. Nightingale,

Do Villiers, C.J.: The terms of the 16th section of Act 36 of 1902 are extremely wide, and the learned counsel for the appellants admits candidly that if that section had not been qualified by another section, the conviction would have been good. He contends, however, that the appellants are protected by the 21st section. Now, it is clear that if the appellants relied upon the exception it is for them to prove that the case falls within the exception. The 21st section is as follows: "Nothing in this part contained shall extend to any person receiving or holding any money or valuable thing by way of stakes or deposit to be paid to the winner of any race or lawful sport, game, or exercise, or to the owner of any horse engaged in any race, or to any owner or occupier, or person duly authorised to act for him, of any racecourse or other ground used for horse-racing, keeping, or using, on any day on which any race is being held under and in accordance with the rules and regulations for the time being in force of the Jockey Club of South Africa, any buildings, sheds, structures, or any enclosed spaces on or within such course or ground, for the purpose of betting, between persons there assembled, on races there and on that day to be held." The section is extremely involved, but it is quite clear that the Legislature regarded the Jockey Club as a corporation who, although, as was said, a close corporation, would, at all events see to it that racing is conducted in a fair and honourable manner. That could be the only reason for requiring that the races—the protected races—should be held under and in accordance with the rules and regulations for the time being in force of the Jockey Club of South Africa. Now, it would appear that by the rules of racing established by the Jockey Club, that club has the power of disqualifying horses—in other words, of preventing any horse which had been disqualified by them from running in any race under the sanction of the Jockey Club. It would appear that the appellants did not recognise the power of the Jockey Club, and that one of the horses which ran at the appellants' race meeting was a horse which had been disqualified in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Jockey Club, and the question now is whether under such circumstances the race could be said to be under the rules and regulations of that club. It appears to me that this is a matter of extreme importance—that jockeys who have been warned off the course should not run horses, and that horses which have been disqualified should not be allowed to run in any race, and if any club which has not the authority of the Jockey Club or any license of the Jockey Club chooses to disregard that rule and allow horses which are disqualified to run in any race, it appears to me clear that such a race is not held under and in accordance with the rules and regulations for the time being in force of the Jockey Club. For this simple reason, I am of opinion that the Magistrate was quite right in his judgment, that there was a contravention of the section. But it has been contended that the appellants were acting in perfect bona-fides, and that, therefore, the amount of the fine is excessive, and that somehow or other this Court should reduce that amount. The 16th section of the Act authorises a much higher fine than the one which was actually imposed. The fine for the first offence is not exceeding £200, and for the second offence not exceeding £500, or imprisonment with hard labour. I confess that the amount of £25 does seem high, considering all the circumstances of the case. Captain Ham, one of the appellants, produced very good testimonials, and apparently he was a man who would not wilfully infringe any provision of the law, and he seems to have been advised that he was not infringing any provision of the law. But that is a circumstance which this Court as a Court of Appeal cannot take into consideration. It is a matter for the executive to decide whether the fines are too high, but so long as the fines are within the limits authorised by the Act, this Court should not interfere with the discretion of the Magistrate. This is to be said in regard to the fines that all the appellants had due notice that an objection was raised to the meeting, and that there would be a prosecution, and, in spite of this notice, the appellants took upon themselves the risk of proceeding with the race meeting, and, therefore, they have only themselves to thank if in the result a heavier penalty was imposed than that which they expected. In any case, whether the penalty is high or low, inasmuch as it was within the limits authorised by the law, this Court should not, as a Court of Appeal, set aside the sentence. The appeal, in my opinion, must therefore be dismissed.

REX V. MABANTI AND (1905.
OTHERS. (Dec. 5th.

Onus of proof—Criminal offence —Proof of want of consent.

Under the Transkeian law it is an offence for any native in certain locations to erect a hut within such locations without the consent of the Resident Magistrate. The accused were convicted of a contravention of the law, but no evidence had been produced of such want of consent.

Held, that the burden of proving the want of consent lay on the prosecution, and that the accused had been improperly convicted.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Lusikisiki, Eastern Pondoland, who had convicted five natives of contravening sections 3 and 9 of Proclamation No. 125 of 1903, in that, on or near Nozozo's Location, they had wrongfully and unlawfully erected a certain hut or building without the consent of the Resident Magistrate being first had and obtained. The Court below imposed a fine of £5.

The Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, said that the evidence for the prosecution was very clear, and the witnesses for the prosecution gave their evidence in a very straightforward and truthful manner. It was difficult to get at the exact date when this building was commenced, as the natives had very little idea as to time. The prosecution alleged that it was commenced in the winter of 1904, which might be any time between May and September. The defence, on the other hand, definitely stated that the hut was begun on the 16th July, 1904. The Court had come to the conclusion that this date was decided upon by the defence in order to endeavour to prove an alibi. The Court was of opinion that it was quite possible that Headman Nozozo did give these men permission to erect the hut, and it was just likely that he, knowing the risk that he was running, changed his mind immediately he saw the hut being erected. The followers of the Ethiopian Church had for the past seven or eight years been endeavouring by legal means, i.e., by formal application, to obtain Church sites in this district without success, and in this case the Court was of opinion that the prisoners, who were all interested in the Ethiopian movement, knew perfectly well that they were doing wrong in erecting this church, and they did so risking the consequences, in order to get a footing for their Church in this district. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, the Court was firmly convinced that the prisoners did build this hut without permission, at the same time knowing that, had they applied to the Magistrate for permission, it would have been refused them. Before concluding (added the Magistrate), he would like to mention that Mabanti, previous to his residing in Nozozo's Location, lived at the Palmerston Mission Station, and was turned out on account of his mixing up with the Ethiopians, and allowing them to use his huts for church. He was turned out by the Assistant Chief Magistrate, and ever since his removal to his present home, he had continued to support them. This fact did not come out in evidence, but would have done so had Mabanti given his evidence.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan appeared for the appellants, Mabanti, Balandile, Madonyela, Matshikilana, and Jeremiah. Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Buchanan said that there was no evidence given in the Court below that the Magistrate's consent had not been obtained. There was no evidence further that the hut was built within any location. He submitted also that the Proclamation was ultra vires. He contended that the onus lay upon the prosecution of proving that the Magistrate's consent had not been obtained.

Mr. Nightingale said that there was sufficient notice to the appellant that he was building within a location. The Proclamation referred generally to the whole of the Territories.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is a first principle in the administration of criminal justice that the prosecution should prove its case. It is of the essence of the offence in the present case that the erection of the hut by the natives should have been done without the consent of the Resident Magistrate of the district, and evidence should have been led that the Magistrate had not consented. It may be said, "Well, if the Magistrate had consented, the accused could have proved it." That may be so, but it does not dispense with the necessity on the part of the prosecution of proving the want of consent. The case is not one in which a fact is alleged which would be peculiarly in the knowledge of the accused, for the prosecutor must and could have known whether or not the Magistrate had given his consent. It is not one of those cases in which it is not possible to prove a negative. It was quite possible to prove the negative that the Magistrate had not given his consent. It is clear that in the present case the Magistrate who tried the case believed that the consent had not been given. He assumed, however, the fact, and he omitted to take the requisite evidence which was necessary for the prosecution. On this simple ground, I am of opinion that this failure was a failure on the part of the prosecution to establish a fact which was essential for the purpose of the conviction. The appeal, on this simple ground, must therefore be allowed, and the conviction quashed. I may add that in the case of a person charged with selling liquor without a licence, the Legislative found it necessary specially to enact that he shall be deemed to be unlicensed unless he produces satisfactory proof of being licensed.

Ex parte LALOO. { 1905.

Alien immigrant—Act 47 of 1902
—Domicile.

Mr. Burton moved, as a matter of urgency, for an order calling on the Colonial Secretary to authorise the Immigration Officer to allow an Indian to land in the Cape Colony. The applicant, it was stated, had been domiciled in Natal, and there was a certificate to that effect from the Immigration Officer at the Point. He was about to proceed to Port Elizabeth, but he was refused permission to land there, and also at Cape Town. He was at present detained on the S.S. Briton at the Docks. Counsel contended that although the applicant could not pass the education test, he could not be refused admission once he had been domiciled in South Africa.

Mr. Nightingale, who appeared for the Crown, read the affidavit of the Immigration Officer at Cape Town, which set out that the applicant could not pass the education test, and that he had stated his wife and children were at present resident in India. Counsel pointed out that there was no evidence of domicile in South Africa, and that all the circumstances of the case did not constitute a domicile which the Court would uphold. The applicant might be domiciled in Natal, but he would not be domiciled in South Africa under the common law.

Maasdorp, J., said there was not sufficient information on either side, and ordered the matter to be mentioned again to-morrow morning.

Postea (December 6).

Mr. Nightingale read an affidavit of the Assistant Immigration Officer, who examined the applicant. It set out that the applicant, who was unable to pass the education test, stated he had resided for some years in Durban, had followed several occupations, that he had no immovable property in South Africa, that he had a wife and one child in India, and in six months' time he intended making a visit of a year to India, but he made no mention of bringing his wife to South Africa.

Mr. Burton read a replying affidavit, in which the applicant set out he was not going to remain in India, that he was going for the purpose of seeing his wife and family, whom he had not seen for the past nine years; and, if he was able to support them, he would bring his wife and family to South Africa.

Mr. Nightingale pointed out that we had not had a large body of immigration of Asiatics in this Colony such as they had had in Natal. His contention was that from the terms of the Natal Act it was perfectly clear that the object of this certificate framed under the Act was not to afford evidence to any applicant of domicile in South Africa, but evidence of the right of such a person when he left Natal to come back again at such time as he pleased. He submitted that that was perfectly clear from the 4th section (sub-section f) of the Act. He contended that the certificate was worthless when an endeavour was made for the purpose of proving and covering the term "domicile" as known in our law. If the applicant had come with his wife and family there would have been no objection to his readmission, because there would have been evidence of his intention of settling in South Africa and making South Africa his home. But he had not brought his wife and family, and there was absolutely no evidence of an intention on his part to make South Africa his domicile. The circumstances of Natal and this colony in reference to this matter of immigration were totally different. There was no reciprocity between the Colonies in this respect. The Natal Act was very much broader than ours. It was perfectly clear that the domicile contemplated by the Cape Act was the domicile known to the common law of South Africa.

Mr. Burton said that his learned friend had argued that the Natal Act name of the said John Walker, by reason whereof he is a necessary party to this suit.

6. All things have happened, all conditions have been performed, and all times have elapsed necessary to entitle the plaintiffs in their aforesaid capacity to receive transfer of the said properties, but the defendants notwithstanding lawful demand have failed and neglected to give such transfer to the said properties in favour of the plaintiffs.

7. John Walker and Sons and John Walker aforesaid carry on business in London, and upon the petition of the plaintiffs this Honourable Court did on the 22nd March, 1904, grant leave to the plaintiffs to sue the defendants by edictal citation, and did order that the said properties be attached ad fundandam jurisdictionem in this action.

Wherefore the plaintiffs in their said capacity pray for: (a) An order compelling the defendants to pass transfer to the plaintiffs in due and customary form of law of such of the properties aforesaid as are registered in their respective names. Or in the alternative only, as to the properties registered in the name of the defendant John Walker. (b) An order compelling the defendant John Walker to pass transfer to the defendants John Walker and Sons and compelling the defendants John Walker and Sons thereupon to pass transfer in due and customary form of law to the plaintiffs. (c) An order authorising and directing the High Sheriff, upon failure by the defendants or either of them to comply in whole or in part with such order as this Honourable Court may make as aforesaid, to pass transfer in place and stead of such defaulting defendant of the property to which such default relates. Or that this Honourable Court may grant to the plaintiffs in the premises such further or other relief as shall seem fitting, together with costs of suit.

The schedule annexed to the intendment set out five properties at Alice, two at Bedford, and four at King William's Town.

The plea of the defendants (John Walker and Sons) and of the defendant (John Walker) was as follows:

1. They admit that a certain order was made by this Honourable Court on the 14th November, 1903, appointing the plaintiffs receivers of the Grand Junction Railways, but do not admit that the defendants (John Walker and Sons), as partners in the Grand Junction Railways or otherwise, were consenting parties to the said order or to the appointment of the plaintiffs as alleged.

2. They do not admit that by the said order the plaintiffs were authorised to receive any assets of the Grand Junction Railways, save and except certain amounts therein set forth, or that the plaintiffs were authorised to deal with or dispose of any assets of the Grand Junction Railways, save as directed by the said order.

3. They deny that any of the immovable properties referred to in paragraph 3 of the intendment or contained in the list attached thereto were or are amongst the assets of the Grand Junction Railways. They deny the correctness of the heading of the said list, but admit the correctness of items 1 to 11 therein.

4. They deny that the properties numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11 in the said list, or any of them, were acquired by or at the expense of John Walker and Sons in connection with their undertaking, as alleged, or that they or any of them are properties included amongst the lands and buildings belonging to John Walker and Sons in connection with their said undertaking.

5. They deny that the properties numbered 3 and 4 in the said list or either of them were acquired by or at the expense of John Walker and Sons in connection with their said undertaking, as alleged, or at all, or that they or either of them are properties included amongst the lands and buildings belonging to John Walker and Sons in connection with the said undertaking, as alleged, or at all. The properties numbered 3 and 4 are the only properties in the said list which stand registered in the name of the second defendant, John Walker, and are the private property of the said John Walker.

6. They deny that the Grand Junction Railways became entitled to the properties numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, or any of them, under either of the agreements referred to in paragraph 4 of the intendment, or that the plaintiffs are entitled to receive any of them as assets of the said joint venture or otherwise, or to deal therewith.

7. They admit that the property numbered 10 in the said list belonged to John Walker and Sons in connection with their said undertaking, and admit that the Grand Junction Railways became entitled thereto, but deny that the said property has become an asset of the Grand Junction Railways under either of the said agreements, or that the plaintiffs were authorised to receive the same.

8. They admit the agreements of the 4th May, 1898, with supplemental agreement, and 18th August, 1898, and say that, according to the same, the said joint venture became entitled to certain immovable properties belonging to the defendants, John Walker and Sons, and the said joint venture became liable in return to pay to the defendants or any of them inter alia the amount of the liability of the Grand Junction Railways, Ltd., to the said defendants, and also to pay all the liabilities incurred or payments made by the defendants, or any of them, after the 1st January, 1898, in connection with any of the immovable properties to which the joint venture had become entitled under the said agreements. They deny that any of the immovable properties to which the said joint venture became entitled as aforesaid, and which stood registered in the names of the defendants, John Walker and Sons, or in the name of the second defendant, John Walker, on the 1st January, 1898, or at any subsequent date, were or are assets of the said joint venture, unless or until the same were or are transferred into the name of the said joint venture.

9. They admit that they refuse to give transfer of any of the said properties in favour of the plaintiffs. They deny the remaining allegations in paragraph 6 of the intendit.

10. Paragraph 7 is admitted.

Wherefore, the defendants, John Walker and Sons and John Walker, pray, that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

For a claim in reconvention, the first-named defendants, John Walker and Sons (plaintiffs in reconvention) say:

1. They crave leave to repeat the allegations in the plea in convention.

2. The Grand Junction Railways, Ltd., is indebted and liable, and was on the 18th August, 1898, indebted and liable to the said John Walker and Sons in the following amounts: (a) To capital moneys upon 3,870 debentures of £100 each, issued to John Walker and Sons by the Grand Junction Railways, Ltd., £387,000; (b) to interest paid by John Walker and Sons on behalf of and as agreed with the Grand Junction Railways, Ltd., upon 500 debentures of £100 each from 31st October, 1896, to 14th August, 1898, £3,500; (c) to interest paid by John Walker and Sons as aforesaid upon 210 debentures of £100 each, from 13th November, 1896, to 14th August, 1898, £1,410; (d) to interest paid by John Walker and Sons as aforesaid upon 290 debentures of £100 each from 8th February, 1897, to 14th August, 1898, £1,740; (e) to interest paid by John Walker and Sons as aforesaid upon 200 debentures of £100 each from 16th November, 1897, to 14th August, 1898, £600; (f) to interest paid by John Walker and Sons as aforesaid upon 500 debentures of £100 each from 15th February, 1898, to 14th August, 1898, £1,000.

3. The said joint venture did by the said agreements of the 4th May, 1898, and 18th August, 1898, agree to pay all the liabilities of the Grand Junction Railways, Ltd., and the said joint venture is now indebted to the first-named defendants (plaintiffs in reconvention) in the amounts set out in paragraph 2 hereof.

4. If this honourable Court should hold that the said receivers are entitled to maintain their action in convention for recovery of any of the properties therein demanded, then and in that case the first-named defendants (plaintiffs in reconvention) are entitled to claim from the said receivers (defendants in reconvention) the said amounts in paragraph 2 hereof set out and due, and owing by the said joint venture to the said first-named defendants (plaintiffs in reconvention).

Wherefore the first-named defendants (plaintiffs in reconvention) pray: (a) Judgment for the said sums of £387,000, £3,500, £1,470, £1,740, £600, and £1,000; (b) interest thereon a tempore morae; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

The second defendants' claim in reconvention was as follows:

1. The second defendant (plaintiff in reconvention) craves leave to repeat the allegations of the plea in convention.

2. On or about the 30th June, 1898, the said defendant (plaintiff in reconvention) made a payment of £1,200 out of his own moneys in part satisfaction of a mortgage debt of £2,500 on the property numbered 10 in the list attached to the intendit, to which property the said joint venture was entitled as from the 1st January, 1898, and the said joint venture has in consequence become indebted to the said second defendant (plaintiff in reconvention) in the said sum of £1,200, with interest thereon from the said 30th June, 1898.

3. If this honourable Court should hold that the said receivers are entitled to maintain their action in convention for recovery of any of the properties therein demanded, then and in that case the second defendant (plaintiff in reconvention) is entitled to claim from the said receivers (defendants in reconvention) the said sum of £1,200, with interest as aforesaid, due by the said joint venture to the said second defendant (plaintiff in reconvention).

Wherefore the said second defendant (plaintiff in reconvention) prays: (a) Judgment for the said sum of £1,200; (b) interest thereon from the 30th June, 1898; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for plaintiffs.
Mr. Russell for defendants.

Mr. Schreiner outlined the principal features of the case.

Mr. Russell said that it might simplify matters a good deal if he stated at the outset that he did not propose to lead evidence on the first claim in reconvention.

Mr. Schreiner: Do I understand that my learned friend abandons that claim?

Do Villiers, C.J., said that he did not suppose Mr. Russell could press the claim unless he had evidence to support it.

John E. P. Close, accountant, Cape Town, was called in support of the plaintiffs' claim. He said that he was familiar with the subject-matter of the action. He had officiated as one of the referees to inquire into the actual cost of the four lines of railway built by the Grand Junction Railways. He had prepared a schedule (produced) from the books and documents, showing the properties registered in the name of John Walker and Sons and John Walker among the assets of the joint venture. Witness gave evidence as to the several properties in question. One of these was a piece of ground at Mossel Bay, bought from Sir Jacob Barry, in respect of which £2,000 was paid in debentures and £2,000 in cash. A bond was raised on the property for £2,500, through Mr. Chiappini. The capital of John Walker and Sons, contributed at the Cape and in London over and above Government subsidy, was £23,535. The expenditure at the Cape up to the 1st January, 1898, amounted to £78,061 13s. 2d. The London and Cape expenditure included the expenditure on the properties that witness had placed in the column as John Walker and Sons, as at the 1st January, 1898, i.e., all properties except those marked "joint venture" and "no cheque paid." He did not consider that Walker was entitled to payment of £1,200 from the receivers. Walker had been credited with the whole of the land, and it was for him to settle with anybody who had lent him the money.

Cross-examined: Lots 3 and 4 were registered in John Walker's name. No. 4 was paid for by a joint venture cheque, and witness therefore considered that it must be a joint venture asset. In arriving at John Walker's capital account, he had included all these properties. He had deducted the sum of £1,325, paid on behalf of Walker.

Benjamin T. Tonkin, formerly secretary of the Grand Junction Railways, and afterwards accountant to John Walker and Sons in connection with the joint venture, said that all these properties were acquired in connection with the undertaking of John Walker and Sons. Witness spoke of the way in which, when the joint venture's account was very much overdrawn, and the financial position was desperate, an account was opened in his own name, on behalf of his employers, so as to prevent money paid into the bank from being impounded. From this account, opened in his name, payments were made from time to time for the joint venture.

Mr. Russell having been heard in argument,

De Villiers, C.J.: The case has been considerably simplified by the fact that the defendants have not tendered any evidence in support of the first claim in reconvention. The Court, therefore, has to decide the case on the pleas, and on the second claim in reconvention.

In regard to the pleas, one of the defences raised is that the defendants were not consenting parties to the order for the appointment of the plaintiffs as receivers, but I am satisfied that they were consenting parties, and that even if they were not in their capacity as partners in the Grand Junction Railways, consenting parties before the order was made, their subsequent conduct estops them from denying the validity of the appointment. They repeatedly recognised the plaintiffs as receivers, and by so doing they saved their own estates from sequestration as insolvent at the suit of the receivers on behalf of the creditors.

It has been further urged on the defendants' behalf that the plaintiffs as receivers are not entitled to institute this action without an order of Court. This objection ought really to have been taken in limine, for if there were any force in it, the plaintiffs could have fortified themselves by obtaining the requisite order. Under the circumstances disclosed in this case there would have been no difficulty in obtaining such consent, and, if such consent be necessary, the Court has no hesitation, even at this stage, to approve of the action. The appointment of the plaintiffs as receivers, with the full consent of the defendants, would be wholly nugatory if the plaintiffs were not to be allowed to take the requisite steps to realise the property of the Grand Junction Railways for the benefit of the creditors. The plaintiffs were to have the power to sell and realise the assets of the Grand Junction Railways, and to distribute the available assets according to the legal order of preference in insolvency.

The only question which remains—and that is the material question—is whether the properties mentioned in the schedule to the intendit can be claimed by the plaintiffs as receivers of the Grand Junction Railways. If the plaintiffs had been trustees in insolvency, it is clear that they would have been entitled to make good their claim. The Grand Junction Railways have not acquired a jus in re by transfer of the scheduled properties, but they have a jus ad rem, and the receivers appointed by the Court are entitled to acquire the full ownership by means of duly registered transfers. It is abundantly clear from the evidence that these properties had been acquired by the partners, not for themselves individually, but for the Grand Junction Railways, a partnership concern in which they were partners. The receivers have to realise these properties for the benefit of the creditors of the partnership, and they cannot do so without first obtaining transfer on their own behalf, or on behalf of the partnership.

In regard to the second claim in reconvention, it is impossible to hold that the defendant, John Walker, is entitled to receive from the plaintiffs the sum of £1,200, which he is alleged to have paid in part satisfaction of the mortgage debt of £2,500 on one of the scheduled properties. Quite apart from the objection that he cannot sue for payment of a debt due to him by the partnership until the creditors of the partnership have been satisfied, it appears to me that the sum of £1,200 sued for is counterbalanced by the sum of £1,325, which has been paid by the partnership in respect of the mortgaged property. The amount was paid out of joint subsidy money, belonging to the partnership, and went in reduction of John Walker's capital account.

The judgment of the Court will be for the plaintiffs in terms of prayer (a) of the intendit (without prejudice to any right the Government might have to double transfer duty), or failing transfer on or before the 28th February, 1906, judgment in terms of prayer (c), with costs. On the claims in reconvention there will be absolution from the instance, with costs.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

COURTILLER AND WALLIS V. TAYLOR AND MYLES.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on a bill of exchange for £188 10s., with interest from 3rd October.

Mr. Benjamin, for defendant, put in an affidavit from Joseph Powell Taylor, a partner in the firm, which set out that the plaintiffs had not kept to their contract with regard to the shipment of certain cases to South Africa, and the defendant had to purchase in the local market, and suffered damages in £125 12s. 3d., the difference between this amount and the amount claimed being tendered.

On the 12th August, 1,000 cases of potatoes were to be shipped, and on the 19th August, 546 cases, but the plaintiffs failed to ship until later on. Counsel submitted that the plaintiffs should be forced into the principal case in order that the defendant could put in his counter-claim, otherwise the defendant would have to pursue his claim outside the jurisdiction of the Court, as the plaintiff was a foreign firm.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiffs agreed to supply the defendants with certain shipments of potatoes, and the defendant agreed on his part to give bills upon receipt of the different shipments. It appeared that a number of shipments were received and bills were given which were subsequently settled. The bill upon which the present suit is brought is for potatoes actually delivered. The defendant sets up a claim for damages against this liquid document. As a rule a defence of that kind is not allowed in provisional proceedings unless the claim for damages is so directly connected with the subject matter of the promissory note that it really refers to the same sum between the parties. In this case the claim for damages is in respect of other shipments which have not arrived, and under the circumstances provisional sentence ought to be given on this promissory note, leaving it to the defendant to make his claim for damages in some other form. Provisional sentence will be granted as prayed.

SCHMIDT V. GRAY AND SON.

Dr. Greer moved that an order of provisional sequestration be discharged. Granted.

BEHR V. ANDREWS.

Mr. Benjamin, for the plaintiff, moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £50, and that the property be declared executable. Mr. De Waal was for the defendant, the executors of the late Mrs. Andrews.

REX V. CRYSTAL.

Undesirable—Domicile—Deportation—Act 47 of 1902.

This was an application upon notice of motion for an order calling on the Colonial Secretary to show cause why Annie Crystal, who was about to be deported, should not be released from custody, or, in the alternative, for an order admitting her to bail until her case was decided by the Supreme Court.

Dr. Greer moved.

[Maasdorp, J.: What is the urgency about the matter?]

Mr. Nightingale (for the Crown): Arrangements have been made so that she will leave this afternoon.

Dr. Greer read an affidavit made by the applicant in Roeland-street Gaol, in which she set out that she came to Cape Town from London two years ago, and that she had lived in Cape Town ever since, and had made it her permanent home. She claimed to be domiciled in Cape Town.

Mr. Nightingale put in a replying affidavit from the Acting Officer-in-Charge of the Immigration Department to the effect that the applicant was a Russian-Polish subject. She was a well-known prostitute. Several times she had left the Colony for the Transvaal, and when she re-entered the Colony she contravened Act 47 of 1902.

Dr. Greer, in the course of his argument, said the Act distinctly exempted the applicant. Section "f" provided that the Act should not apply to persons domiciled in South Africa, and it said nothing about being domiciled in the Cape Colony. Taking the statement of the respondent, she was still domiciled in South Africa, even although she entered the Transvaal. However desirable it might be to deal with such persons, the authorities had not the power under the Act.

Mr. Nightingale quoted sections 4 and 8 of the Act, and contended that the applicant was a prohibited immigrant within the meaning of the Act, as she made her living by prostitution. It lay upon the applicant to clearly prove that she was domiciled in South Africa. Her statements were contradicted by the Immigration Officer. Clearly, the Act was designed to meet this class of case.

Maasdorp, J.: Under section 4 of Act 47 of 1902 prohibited immigrants are prohibited from immigrating either by land or sea into this colony, and if they should in violation of that section enter the Colony, then under section 8 they are liable to be removed at any time from the limits of the Colony, and to be kept in such custody as the regulations prescribe, pending their removal. It is stated on the part of the immigration authorities that the applicant in this case is prohibited, because she is a person who lives on the proceeds of prostitution, which is provided for in sub-section "e" of section 2. There is no denial of that statement as to her character. The applicant says the Act does not apply to her, because under section 3 she is one of the exempted persons having her present domicile in South Africa. The only question now the Court has to decide is whether the applicant is a person who is domiciled in South Africa. Her domicile before she came to this country appears to have been in Poland. She herself says that she came to this country permanently to reside here and make it her home. It is necessary for her to establish the fact when she has changed her domicile. She says she arrived in Cape Town two years ago, and ever since she remained here. In order to ascertain the intention of a person with respect to the change of such domicile, one has to arrive at the necessary inferences from the express intention of such person, together with the actual conduct of the person. Now, in this case, in the short affidavit, there is a palpable falsehood. She has not been in Cape Town ever since she arrived here, because she was out of the Colony for six months; consequently I should be unwilling to accept her statement of her intention when she arrived in the Colony with respect to permanent residence. Having regard to her actions and mode of life here, it is difficult to discover any circumstance upon which the Court could find a decision of her permanent domicile. It is often easy to discover from a business which is carried on, or from the occupation a man is engaged in, and the manner in which he carries on his business, whether he has come to the country for a permanent residence. Those are circumstances which are taken into consideration, and assist the Court in coming to a conclusion. In this case the occupation of the applicant is not such as one could infer therefrom that she intended to carry on that business here permanently. She seems to be what she is described: a common prostitute, and she seems, having left her native land, to be a sort of wanderer. It is said, although she went to the Transvaal, it is part of South Africa, and that her presence there does not affect her statement that this is her domicile, but clearly by merely going to a country and wandering from one province to another no domicile is established. It would be necessary, in the first instance, to have some permanent place of residence where a person intends to reside here. The only evidence is that, having resided for a period of more than sixteen months in Cape Town, she moved up to another country—to the Transvaal—and she lived there for six months. Not satisfied there, she comes back to the Colony. Under the circumstances, I find that the applicant has failed to establish the fact that she is domiciled in South Africa, and the application must be refused.

CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL { 1905.
V. RATEPAYERS' ASSOCIATION. { Dec. 12th.

This was an application on behalf of the Town Council on notice of motion, calling upon the respondents, who were the applicants in a matter in which a rule had been granted, returnable on January 12, to show cause why an order should not be granted anticipating the return day of the rule nisi, and for an order to set down the hearing of this application for a day before January 12, and that costs be costs in the cause.

The affidavit of William George Fairbridge, of Cape Town, one of the applicants' attorneys, was as follows:

1. The above-named petitioners applied to this honourable Court on the 17th ult., ex parte, and obtained a rule nisi, calling upon the respondent council to show cause why it should not be interdicted from signing a certain contract referred to in the petition; the said rule was made returnable on January 12 next.

2. The Town Council of Cape Town had no notice of the application. The petitioners applied for a rule returnable on the 12th inst. The rule was made returnable on January 12, as I understand on account of pressure of other work before the Court. The Town Council had no opportunity of showing urgent reasons why the motion should be made returnable on an earlier date.

3. The question raised in the petition has relation to the execution of a contract between the Town Council and the firm of Edmund Nuttall and Company, in respect of paving certain streets in Cape Town, the said firm being the successful tenderers therefor, their tender having been accepted by the Town Council.

4. Considerable opposition has been raised within the Town Council to the completion and execution of the written contract, which has to be executed between the Town Council and the said firm of Edmund Nuttall and Company, although the Town Council duly accepted the tender in question so far back as August 10 last.

5. From that time the tender and contract in question have been continually before the Town Council, and have taken up an inordinate amount of time, although very little progress has been made in the matter.

6. The affidavits made by certain members of the Council, who are in favour of executing the said contract, state that, in the opinion of the deponents, there is an intention on the part of the members of the Council opposed to the contract, to use every device to delay the execution of the contract in the expectation or hope that something may occur which would enable the said contract to be thrown out.

7. At the present time the next question will have to be dealt with by the Council will be to settle the terms of the contract to be executed, and motions in respect of this have been set down for consideration by the Council. The Mayor has, however, ruled that to consider such motions will be contempt of Court, and progress in this respect is stayed, and unless relief be granted will be stayed until January 12 next.

8. The time of the officials of the Council has been taken up to an undue extent by matters connected with this motion, and, in consequence of the delay, caused by the granting of the rule nisi in question.

9. The Town Council urge that the return day should be anticipated and an earlier date fixed for the hearing of the motion.

10. On the 9th instant, I saw the Honourable Sir John Buchanan, who informed me that the Court would be prepared to take this motion on the 14th instant, and suggested that I should see the petitioners on the subject. I accordingly saw the petitioners' attorney on that day, who informed me that he would not consent to the application being heard on the 14th instant. He stated that one of his reasons was that when the replying affidavits of the Town Council were served, the petitioners intended to appoint an accountant to investigate the books of the Town Council.

11. Replying affidavits were served on petitioners' attorneys on the 9th instant, and I say to the best of my knowledge and belief that an investigation of the books of the Town Council will not be necessary for the purposes of this motion. Moreover, that had the return day been fixed for the 12th instant, there would have been no more time for such investigations that the petitioners now have.

12. The Town Council will be seriously prejudiced, and impeded in its work if the motion be not heard before the 12th January next.

The answering affidavit of Alexander John MacCallum was as follows:

1. That I am attorney to the Cape Town Ratepayers' Association and others, petitioners (respondents in this application).

2. That I was at 3.30 p.m. (Monday, the 11th inst.) served with a copy of this application on behalf of the petitioners.

3. That at 12.40 p.m. on Saturday, the 9th inst., I was served with various replying affidavits in the principal case herein, extending to about 54 pages brief sheets.

4. That on the same day Mr. W. G. Fairbridge, the attorney for the Town Council, called on me and desired to know whether I would consent to the return day being anticipated on the 14th inst.

5. That I intimated that as the matter was very important, and that as intricate points were raised, and that as they had not sooner made application, I could not in the interests of my clients agree to any such anticipation of the return day.

6. That on Monday morning, Mr. Fairbridge served on me the petition attached hereto praying the Judges in Chambers to anticipate the return day on the 14th inst., and that thereafter I proceeded with Mr. Fairbridge to the Supreme Court, but that the Judge declined to hear the petition.

7. That when the rule nisi in question was granted my clients applied to have it returnable on the 12th December, but the presiding Judge stated that in view of the pressure of work presently before the Court he would have to make it returnable on the 12th January.

8. That had the rule nisi been made returnable on the 12th of December, your deponent would have asked that the replying affidavits should be filed at least ten days prior to the said return day.

9. That your deponent would point out that although the rule nisi was granted so far back as the 17th November last, no replying affidavits were filed until Saturday as above mentioned.

10. Your deponent begs to state that the matters treated of in the petition under question are so intricate and involve so considerable an amount of investigation that he has, on behalf of his clients, retained the services of a qualified accountant to investigate the state of certain accounts in connection with the paving of streets, and examine certain financial statements in the possession of the Town House authorities.

11. That such investigation is absolutely necessary, and will take some considerable time.

12. That with reference to paragraph 11 of the said Fairbridge's affidavit, stating: "That in his opinion the investigation of the books of the Town Council will not be necessary for the purposes of this motion," I have simply to state that as the legal adviser of the petitioners in the case under question, my opinion differs from that of Mr. Fairbridge.

13. That your deponent cannot admit that the work of the Town Council will, as asserted in the said affidavit, be seriously prejudiced or impeded.

14. That your deponent informed Mr. Fairbridge yesterday morning that, provided the return day were anticipated at some period not within 10 days from this date, he would raise no objection, but that in consideration of the mass of affidavits filed on behalf of the Town Council, your deponent considered it an absolute impossibility to furnish satisfactory replies within any such period as that suggested by the said Fairbridge.

15. Your deponent begs leave to suggest to this honourable Court that, in view of the fact that no steps had been taken until Saturday last to anticipate the return day herein, and that until 12.40 on that date no replying affidavits had been lodged, the said Town Council do not appear to have been so greatly prejudiced or inconvenienced as the affidavit under reply would appear to indicate.

16. On behalf of the petitioners, who are members of the Town Council, I deny the assertion in paragraph 4 of the affidavit under reply, to the effect that the "Town Council duly accepted" the tender in question.

17. It is not the fact that the tender and contract in question have been continually before the Town Council; on the contrary, the said contract has only been discussed in Council since the rule nisi herein, members not having previously had an opportunity of perusing the same.

18. I acquiesce in the statement in paragraph 6 of the affidavit under reply, in so far as that every lawful effort has been used to prevent the Council from entering into what, in the opinion of your petitioners, is an illegal contract.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for applicants.
Sir H. Juta, K.C., for respondents.

Mr. Schreiner said that the great practical point was to have the matter decided one way or another. With all respect to Mr. MacCallum, it was scarcely possible he should be in a position to determine how far this was a serious prejudice to the working of the Town Council, of which he was not a member. It was unlikely such an application would be made unless the matter was seriously inconveniencing the Town Council. It would be seen how inconvenient it might be that the matter should be left in abeyance for a long period of time in relation to a contract which, upon the acceptance of the tender on August 10 last, should really have been brought to a head one way or the other. Everything had been done since then to prevent this matter going through. It was an unusual thing, seeing how long the matter had been in abeyance, that the Corporation had no notice of the application made on November 17, and, therefore, had no opportunity of preventing the rule being granted. The respondents said they wanted 10 days to reply, and counsel said they were not entitled to it; neither did they show any reason for the 10 days. Counsel thought 48 hours would be sufficient.

[Maasdorp, J.: Ten days seems a long time in comparison with 48 hours. What about Friday?]

We would be content with Friday.

Sir H. Juta: We can't be ready by Friday. Counsel (proceeding) said upon a statement by the City Treasurer and the Town Clerk, it appeared that no one was prepared to say whether the amount voted would be exceeded or not. He believed if the contract was above a certain amount, the Town Council would have to go to the ratepayers. He did not suppose that the Town Council had the power to enter into a contract and bind the ratepayers to £500,000, without going in for a loan.

[Maasdorp, J.: I thought the ratepayers had sanctioned it?]

A certain amount of it.

Our point is that this contract exceeds it, and consequently they will have to go to the ratepayers for the other part of the loan. I represent, not only the Ratepayers' Association, but some five or six Town Councillors.

[Maasdorp, J.: That makes no difference.]

Yes, because they say we object to any contract being entered into when the money has not yet been voted by the ratepayers, and further, if the ratepayers refuse to endorse the action of the Council, the Town Council will become personally responsible.

[Maasdorp, J.: I dare say it is a rich association, and they can go through the whole of the books in three days, by the aid of a large number of accountants.]

Mr. Schreiner, in reply, said that the respondents hoped to delay the execution of the contract, so that six months would elapse from the date of the original motion in July last, and a mere majority would be sufficient to review and rescind.

Maasdorp, J.: The only question the Court has to consider is whether, upon a day being fixed for the hearing of this motion, the parties will be all prepared to go on with their case. It has been contended by the legal advisers of the respondent in this matter that, in order to support the issues there raised, it will be necessary for them to obtain a good deal more information, and they say a number of days will be required before they can be prepared with such information; but it appears to me that they rather exaggerate the amount of labour required to obtain that information. Perhaps, if the date is fixed for the 15th, it will happen that, when the argument comes on, some difficulty may be presented from the shortness of the time granted, but so far as I can see through the case at present, I feel that they ought to be prepared by Monday, the 18th. The Court will therefore set down the hearing of this motion for Monday, costs to be costs in the cause.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne, and Lawton. Respondents' Attorney: A. J. McCallum.]

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

ESTATE PRITCHARD V. FISCHER. { 1905.
Dec. 13th.

Mr. Benjamin was for the plaintiff and Mr. H. G. v. Zyl for the defendant.

Mr. Benjamin moved for provisional judgment on a promissory note for £481.

Provisional sentence as prayed.

GOVEY V. CLARKE AND CO.

Mr. Uppington (with him Mr. Long) was for the plaintiff, and Mr. Gardiner was for the defendant. Mr. Uppington moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £515, with interest and costs. The defendants, Mr. Uppington said, made a promissory note for the amount claimed in respect of a consignment of eggs in favour of R. Warner and Co., who had the bill discounted by the plaintiffs. Defendants pleaded want of consideration on the ground that the eggs were not according to the samples. The eggs, which came from Russia, it appeared from the correspondence, were below the "electioneering stage."

The eggs had originally been imported in favour of Zion, Chiat and Co.

Maasdorp, J.: There is a serious dispute as to the facts between the parties in this case, and it would be impossible for the Court finally to determine that dispute upon the affidavits which has been put in, and all the Court can do at present is to ascertain which of the parties is in all probability likely to be successful if all the circumstances of the case are taken into consideration. The action is brought by the plaintiff as legal holder of a promissory note made by the defendant in favour of Warner and Co. The defence sets up want of consideration against this bill. Now, it is quite clear that unless there are certain special circumstances which vary the rights of the parties, that want of consideration between the original parties to a bill cannot be set up against a subsequent legal holder. The defendant says such circumstances do exist, but there is a strong indication that the transaction was such as alleged by the plaintiff to have been, that he merely discounted the promissory note and took it in part settlement of a debt due by Warner to him. Upon the information before the Court, provisional sentence must be given with costs, with liberty to the defendant to sue to recover these costs in the principal action if he thinks fit to establish his position.

TENNANT V. ZIERADZKI.

Mr. Swift moved for judgment under Rule 329d for £22 17s. 7d. for professional services and costs.

PHILLIPS V. LEA.

Mr. Gardiner, for the plaintiff, moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £59 10s., balance of an instalment of £150, and that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan, for the defendant, said the question was whether the plaintiff was entitled to claim certain costs from the defendant, seeing there were negotiations for a settlement. A promise of a tender was made, with costs up to date, and after that the plaintiff's attorney set down the case. It was the costs of setting down that were objected to.

Provisional sentence granted, with costs, including the costs in dispute, and the property declared executable.

SHEPHERD V. VAN RENEN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for the final adjudication of the defendant's estate as insolvent. Mr. Benjamin was for the defendant. The plaintiff had obtained judgment for £250 and £1,000 on two mortgage bonds. The property was subsequently sold, and realised £200 and £750, leaving a balance of £497 5s. 10d., which included Sheriff's expenses.

Mr. Benjamin said that his client had a good action against the plaintiff's son for a substantial sum of money, and that when the action was instituted the sequestration proceedings were commenced.

Order granted.

SEDGWICK AND CO. V. DAVIDOFF.

Mr. Benjamin was for the plaintiff and Mr. Alexander was for the defendant.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an order adjudicating the defendant's estate as insolvent.

Mr. Alexander read the affidavit of the defendant, which set out that while he admitted his indebtedness in the sum of £555 on a mortgage bond, he denied his indebtedness in the amount of £683 for goods sold and delivered. He admitted he was indebted in the sum of £27 4s. 9d. At a meeting of the defendant's creditors, it was agreed that he should assign his estate, and that he should continue to carry on the business at a salary of £3 a week until the business showed a profit. For a considerable time the defendant carried out the decision of the creditors, but a creditor who had not signed the deed of assignment came along, refused to sign, and then the other creditors said their obligations were at an end.

Order of sequestration granted.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Bailey moved for the rehabilitation of Alexander Craighead Cruickshanks, Roelof Chas. Malherbe, and William Walker. Mr. De Waal moved for the rehabilitation of Petrus Johannes de Wet, and Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for the rehabilitation of Hendrik Cornelius Dreyer.

Granted.

Mr. Bailey moved to make absolute a rule granted under the Derelict Lands Act.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte PIENAAR.

Mr. Roux moved to make absolute a rule granted under the Derelict Lands Act.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte THE RECEIVERS GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS.

Mr. Uppington moved to have a rule granted under the Derelict Lands Act made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte GOEZAAR.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones moved for leave to raise certain money on mortgage. The petitioner was the executrix in the will of her late husband and her children, who were all minors, were the registered owners of certain land valued at £1,100. The properties had been in a dilapidated state for some time, and she was desirous of obtaining £350 to put the houses in proper repair, in order that she might get rents sufficient to maintain herself and children.

Order granted, the bond to be executed, with the condition that £24 per annum be paid off by the applicant.

WILKINSON V. WILKINSON.

Mr. Gutsche moved to make absolute a rule calling on the respondent to show cause why plaintiff should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis.

Rule made absolute.

Ex parte DE KLERK.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for leave to the petitioner to raise £650 on a farm in order to pay the debts of the petitioner's children, who had made themselves responsible for the debts, to assist the petitioner.

Leave granted to mortgage the property to the extent of £650, to enable the applicant to pay the debts mentioned.

Ex parte BASKIND AND WIFE.

Mr. Watermeyer moved on behalf of the petitioners for leave to register an ante-nuptial contract. The matter had previously been before the Court, and it was ordered to stand over for further information as to the property of the parties. The terms of the contract set forth were now testified to by both parties as the terms they intended entering into, and they would have done so before marriage had they not been told that it could be done afterwards.

Leave granted to execute the contract in terms of the draft put in.

LYONS V. LYONS.

Mr. Sutton moved to make absolute a rule to enable the applicant to sue the defendant in forma pauperis for judicial separation. The rule was granted to the petitioner on the ground of cruelty. Several times he threatened to take his wife's life, and the petitioner ultimately left him.

The defendant appeared and denied the allegations, and made certain charges against his wife.

Leave granted, Mr. Lewis, having had charge of the proceedings on a former occasion, appointed as advocate.

Ex parte ADAMS.

Mr. Payne moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to amend a bond so that the petitioner's full name would appear on the bond.

Granted.

STYLE V. STYLE.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for leave to sue the wife, who is defendant, by edictal citation, for restitution of conjugal rights, by reason of her malicious desertion.

Leave granted, return day 1st February, personal service to be effected.

Ex parte DU TOIT.

Mr. Gardiner moved for an order authorising the acceptance of a bond which the applicant had executed in favour of his wife, but not in same christian name as that appearing on the ante-nuptial contract.

Granted.

Ex parte RONALDSON AND WIFE.

Mr. Swift moved for leave to the petitioners to register an ante-nuptial contract. The matter had been ordered to stand over for information as to the property. Petitioner's wife at the time of the marriage was possessed of £35 and personal effects, and the applicant had half-share in a shipping business at East London.

Leave granted to register the ante-nuptial contract in terms of section 5 of the petition, without prejudice to the creditors.

VAN DER VYVER V. VAN DER VYVER.

Mr. Roux moved for the appointment of a curator to the respondent, who was incapable of managing her own affairs. Medical testimony showed that the respondent, Anna Christiana van der Vyver, was an imbecile, and totally incapable of looking after her own affairs.

Mr. Reitz appointed curator ad litem in proceedings to have the respondent declared incapable of managing her own affairs. Proceedings to be taken by means of notice of motion, the affidavits to be served on Mr. Reitz, who is authorised to obtain information on affidavit, and to send written reports. The return day to be 1st February.

Ex parte MILLS.

Mr. J. E. K. de Villiers moved for the appointment of petitioner's husband as trustee to accept transfer of certain property on behalf of her minor daughter by her previous marriage.

The matter was ordered to stand over for further information.

Ex parte GIBBS AND OTHERS.

Mr. Struben moved for leave to raise £5,000 on mortgage, to meet certain liabilities and to pay legacies. There was a consent from the major heirs in the estate, and the Master's report was favourable.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

In re THE AMOY BRICK (1905.
SYNDICATE. (Dec. 14th.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers submitted the final report of the liquidators, and moved for its confirmation with certain compromises.

Granted.

Ex parte MILLS.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers mentioned this matter, which was ordered to stand over from the previous day for information as to the circumstances of the petitioner's divorce from her first husband. Counsel produced the report, which showed she was plaintiff, and there was no claim in reconvention. The application was to have petitioner's husband, David Mills, appointed as trustee to take transfer of property for a minor daughter by the first marriage.

Granted.

In re WARD AND CO., LTD.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan applied for the confirmation of the official liquidator's report. Counsel also applied to allow the books to remain in possession of Henry Ward, who was carrying on the business.

Granted.

Ex parte KNOETSEN.

Mr. Russell moved for an order authorising the signature of certain partition transfers. The Master's report was favourable.

Granted, subject to the Master's recommendation being carried out.

Ex parte BOUWER.

Mr. Sutton moved for an order confirming a sale of property, in an estate in which the petitioners were executors, to Jacobus Stephanus Bruwer, who made the best offer for the property.

Granted.

Ex parte VAN ECK.

Mr. Russell moved for an order authorising the execution of a mortgage bond in the estate in which the petitioner was executor testamentary. The Master's report was favourable.

Granted, subject to the Master's recommendation being carried out.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. LE ROUX AND CONCORDIA (NAMAQUALAND) COPPER MINING CO.

Mr. Nightingale moved for the cancellation of certain mineral leases granted to the respondents for a period of 99 years, on the ground that the respondents had failed to pay any rent or carry out the conditions of the lease. The officials of the syndicate could not be found.

Maasdorp, J., granted a rule nisi returnable January 12, one publication in the "Gazette" and "Cape Times."

Ex parte FOURIE.

Mr. Russell moved for an order authorising the exchange of certain property in order that the petitioner's inherited property might be merged in one farm and not scattered over the country, and to raise a mortgage. The Master had no objection.

Granted.

Ex parte DE WITT AND WIFE.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for leave to register an ante-nuptial contract. The parties intended to execute the contract, but as the petitioner could not find a notary public in Cathcart, he got married on the 19th September, 1905—the day fixed for the event.

Granted, without prejudice to the rights of creditors.

WILTER V. WILTER.

This was an action for a decree of divorce, and for a declaration that the defendant has forfeited a half-share in the property acquired since a deed of separation was entered into between the parties.

Dr. Greer was for the plaintiff, and the defendant was in default.

PEDERSEN V. GOLDBERG.

Mr. Sutton moved to make absolute a rule granted restraining the defendant from removing goods pending an action.

Granted.

Ex parte THE EXECUTORS IN ESTATE LATE MCGRATH.

Mr. Bailey moved for an order authorising the amendment of certain letters of administration in order to have the heir's names corrected so as to get transfer of certain property.

Granted.

Ex parte KLEYN.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the passing of certain transfers of property. The petitioner was the executrix in the estate of her late husband, and she sold the property for £2,400 to her two grandchildren, reserving the right to remain in possession herself.

Maasdorp, J., ordered the application to be renewed after notice to the widow in the estate of petitioner's son and to the children, Mr. Krige to act as curator to the children.

Ex parte CORNELIUS AND WIFE.

Mr. Struben moved to have an antenuptial contract registered.
Granted.

Ex parte VAN HUYSTEEN.

Mr. Wright moved for leave to sue Peter Hendrik Ferreira by edictal citation for damages for seduction, and for an order restraining him from receiving money he has inherited pending the action.

Leave granted, returnable 1st February, personal service to be effected and the legator restrained from paying the sum of £83 and the Master restrained from paying £63 to the respondent pending an action.

Ex parte THE CAPE CANNING CO.

Mr. Van Zyl moved for the liquidation of the company and the appointment of Mr. G. W. Steytler as provisional liquidator.

Granted.

Ex parte DU PLESSIS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the passing of a certain transfer of property. All the children were majors, and had consented to the transfer and the sale of the property.

Maasdorp, J., made no order, as it appeared certain minors might be interested in case their parents predeceased the surviving testator. The parties if advised could make a further application, and in that case the minors should be properly represented.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

GOURLAY V. BAUMGARTEN. { 1905.
Dec. 15th.

Dr. Rainsford moved for an order, calling on the respondent to complete the transfer of certain letters patent ceded to the applicant, who had advanced certain moneys to the respondent to carry on a lighting company, with an acetylene gas generator, on condition that he was to get a cession of the patent. Letters patent had been granted to the respondent in Pretoria.

Order granted, directing Baumgarten to execute transfer of the cession, with the patent rights.

THE MASTER V. DURANDT'S TRUSTEE.

Mr. Nightingale moved for an order on the respondent, who is sole trustee in the estate, compelling him to file a liquidation account.

Respondent ordered to file the account within three months, and pay the costs of the application.

In re THE ROYAL HOTEL CO., LTD.

Mr. Roux moved for the confirmation of the liquidator's report. The report had lain for inspection for the usual time, and there was no objection. Counsel also asked for directions as to how the claims of creditors were to be proved, and for an order to make certain payments, according to agreement of 16th June, 1905.

Report confirmed, payments sanctioned, and creditors to prove by affidavit.

Ex parte VIJELLSTROM.

Mr. Lewis moved for the confirmation of the sale of certain property to the petitioner, who was executor testamentary in the estate. There was evidence that the sale was well attended, and that the price was a fair and reasonable one.

Granted.

Ex parte CLASSEN.

Mr. Watermeyer moved for an order authorising the transfer of certain property.

Granted.

ESTATE STEPHAN V. PARTRIDGE.

Mr. Searle moved, on behalf of William A. Currey and Ed. J. Moore, as joint trustees of the estate of J. C. J. Stephan, for an order authorising the cancellation of a sale, or grant of leave to them to sue Astley C. Partridge by edictal citation for the completion of the sale, or alternatively for the cancellation thereof, with an order, if necessary, to attach the property registered in the name of Partridge.

The affidavit of the applicants showed that on October 2, 1903, Stephan passed a first mortgage bond for £3,500 of Evan Hopkins Jones, of Mowbray, and a second bond to Hilda Roberts for £1,000, under which he specially hypothecated certain house and grounds at Rosebank, known as Gavenwood. Partridge became surety for the payment of the bonds. Thereafter Stephan became insolvent, and the property was submitted to public auction, and purchased by Partridge for £3,165. The petitioners were given to understand by Partridge that he had arranged with the mortgagees, and he would assume the liabilities of Stephan, in settlement of the purchase price of the property. About April 1, Partridge disappeared. For a long time no trace of his whereabouts was discovered, but petitioners were informed that he was now in London, engaged as an employee in a motor-car business. He had failed to comply with the conditions of sale on which he purchased the property, and had neglected to take transfer of the property. Petitioners were anxious to complete the liquidation of Stephan's estate, and consequently brought this suit to compel Partridge to take transfer. Counsel explained that Partridge had been seen in London by one person, but his present whereabouts were not now known.

Leave was granted to sue by edictal citation, personal service to be effected if possible, and if not, an advertisement to be inserted in the "Daily Telegraph."

Ex parte STRADLING.

Mr. D. Buchanan moved for an order as to the dealing with certain moneys. The affidavit stated that applicant was the sole trustee in the estate of the late John Godfrey Kruger. There were two children of the marriage, both of whom are minors. It was his duty to hand over certain moneys to the wife of the deceased, but he did not feel prepared to do so without an order of the Court, as she had been separated from her husband and was addicted to drink. It was feared that if the money was paid over to her that she would not devote it to the interests of the children. A rule nisi calling on the wife to show cause why some maintenance should not be kept for the children out of the interest was granted.

Ex parte LOOTS.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the passing of certain transfers. The petitioner and his wife, Maria Magdalena Elizabeth Loots, since deceased, made a will leaving the joint property to the survivor and the children of the marriage, and as it was necessary to wind up the estate, an order to transfer certain portions of the property as set down in the will to the children.

Maasdorp, J., said he thought it better to refer the matter to the Master before giving judgment.

Ex parte VEFDT.

Mr. De Waal moved for leave to mortgage certain property which was bequeathed to minors. It was necessary that the mortgages should be raised before the transfer could be effected.

An order in terms of the Master's report was granted.

Ex parte THE EXECUTORS IN THE ESTATE OF THE LATE GRUNDLING.

Mr. Benjamin moved for leave to sell certain property situate in the district of Oudtshoorn. The Master's report was favourable.

Granted.

HOWARD V. HOWARD.

Mr. Sutton moved on behalf of Ellen Mabel Howard for the appointment of a curator ad litem in the estate of her husband, who was at present confined at Valkenberg Asylum.

[Maasdorp, J.: What is the value of the property.]

There is property in Johannesburg and £50 in cash.

[Maasdorp, J.: I think you will find that there is no necessity to take this course unless the property exceeds £500.]

But there are certain minor children.

[Maasdorp, J.: I think we had better get further information.]

Mr. Sutton: It is to be presumed that they had legal advice.

The matter was adjourned for further information as to the value of the estate.

SANDERS V. CAPE TOWN TRAMWAYS CO.

Mr. Watermeyer was for the applicant and Sir H. Juta, K.C., was for the respondent. Mr. Watermeyer said this was the return day of a rule calling on the respondents to show cause why the applicant should not be allowed to sue them in forma pauperis for £400 damages, by reason of an accident to the applicant on August 1 last. It appeared from affidavit that the applicant was driving down Sir Lowry-road in a cart with another man, and owing to the unlawful action of the company in putting the road in a dangerous condition, the shaft of the cart broke, the horse bolted and overturned the cart, and both applicants were thrown out, with the result that the applicant sustained injuries and was confined to the hospital for some time.

Sir H. Juta read replying affidavits, which set out that every care was taken in relaying the blocks.

Sir H. Juta: The applicant did not even suggest in what respect the company was acting unlawfully, nor did he give any details of the accident, or as to how or where it occurred. The applicant should reasonably give some details of the accident. The superintendent of the Tramway Co. saw the cart after the accident, and he stated that the shaft was in a rotten state, and might have broken at any time. In submitting a claim, one of the applicant's attorneys stated there was a collection of rails on the road, but the superintendent was in a position to state that there was no such heap of rails. A witness of the action, in an affidavit, said the driver had a large picture in front, which seemed to hamper him in the control of the horse.

Maasdorp, J., said the petition was very vague in merely stating that the damage was occasion by the unlawful act of the respondents. The Court could not ascertain from that if a prima facie case was made out. He thought it would be possible to amend the petition by annexing some statement as to what the unlawful action was, or whether there was neglect. More definite information must be tendered as to what the cause of action was. The matter could stand over, and be mentioned again.

LIS V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. (1905. Dec. 15th.)

Undesirable — Deportation — Act 47 of 1902, Sec. 3 (d).

This was an application on notice of motion, calling on the Colonial Secretary to show cause why the applicant should not be released from custody. The applicant had been arrested on entering the Colony from the Transvaal, and it was the intention of the Government to deport him. The applicant's affidavit set out that on November 19 he was arrested and confined in Roeland-street, awaiting deportation, at the instigation of the officer in charge of the Immigration Department. His arrest, he maintained, was wrongful and unlawful, as the Act could not apply to him. He was a Russian by nationality, and had been in South Africa for five years. For the five years he had never departed from South Africa, and during the war was enrolled as a member of the Cape Town Guards, and had a discharge, and his conduct was exemplary.

A lengthy correspondence between Mr. Brady (the attorney for the respondent) and Mr. Cousins (the officer in charge of the defendant) was read.

The answering affidavit of Mr. Cousins dated November 15, stated that in consequence of inquiries he had caused to be made as to the record of the applicant, it appeared that he was generally a man of bad repute and an associate of pimps. The validity of the discharge from the Town Guard, produced by the applicant, was questioned. He was living on the earnings of a prostitute in German South-West Africa. The applicant had been charged with serious crimes on several occasions.

Regarding the question as to whether the applicant had been enrolled in the Town Guard, Mr. Brand, of the Defence Department, filed an affidavit to the effect that the only Lis in the Town Guard in 1901 was a Joseph Lis—the applicant was named Jack Lis.

Several replying affidavits made by non-commissioned officers of the Long-street company in which the applicant was enrolled, stated they recollected him serving in the corps.

The applicant denied the allegations contained in Mr. Cousins's affidavit, adding that he was receiving £30 a month from a general store in the Transvaal. He produced framed souvenirs of the regiment presented to each member by the officer commanding the regiment before it was disbanded, and in which his name appeared.

Dr. Greer was for the applicant, and Mr. Nightingale was for the Crown.

Mr. Nightingale was about to read further affidavits, when

Dr. Greer objected to further affidavits being read without the permission of the Court. The first application was made in November, and the case was ordered to stand over until December 12, and it was only on that morning that the affidavits counsel was about to read were served on them.

Maasdorp, J., said the sole point rested on the question of the applicant being honourably discharged from the Town Guard.

Mr. Nightingale: We question the validity of that discharge.

Mr. Nightingale was about to read the affidavit of Detective Head Constable Grant, which was testifying to character, when Maasdorp, J., said all the Court wanted was evidence that the applicant was not in the Town Guard.

The affidavit of Captain Johnstone stated that he was adjutant of the Town during the time Lis was alleged to have served in it. He had seen the discharge put in by applicant. The discharge mentioned no regimental number, and the character was filled in in a different handwriting to the rest of the discharge, and it was not in accordance with regulations to give an exemplary character for short service, and it would be noticed that the character was given as "exemptory." To the best of his belief, the signature to the discharge was not that of Major Seale.

Dr. Greer put in certificates granted to other men in the same company, which corresponded with that produced by the applicant.

Mr. Nightingale said one of the exemptions under the Act was anybody who had served in His Majesty's Forces, and had received a good discharge. Now, Lis, when first asked denied having served in a corps, but then said he served in the Town Guard. It would also be noticed that the name of Jack Lis was not on the roll, but there was a Joseph Lis. The Crown admitted that the applicant did serve in the corps, but after the date admitted by him, and he put in no certificate of his service then, whilst the Act required him to produce a certificate for his whole service.

Without calling on Dr. Greer,

Maasdorp, J., said that this matter could be very shortly disposed of, without considering many of the points which had been raised in the affidavits and arguments. It appeared that the applicant had been treated as a prohibited immigrant by the Immigration Department, and he alleged that he had been wrongly so treated, because he held that he came under the exemption in the Act. The section he referred to was sub-section D of section 3. The applicant produced a discharge, in which his character during service was described as exemplary. It was suggested at first that it was impossible for him to have a discharge, because he never served in the Volunteer forces at all, and even when that was disposed of, another difficulty was raised, because it was said that he served for a much longer period than he gave a certificate for. Doubt was thrown on the certificate, to the effect that it was forged. On the face of it, that certificate seemed to be a genuine one, and comparing it with the others, it appeared to be all right. The Court had therefore to accept it as the discharge given by Major Seale to the applicant, in which he was described as a man of exemplary character. An affidavit had been produced to the effect that the document was not in proper form, and that the military authorities would have regarded it as in all respects an irregular discharge, which they would never accept as good, but he (his lordship) could not hold that view, and he arrived at the conclusion that Jack Lis did serve in the Volunteer forces, and that he received on the expiration of his service a good discharge. It was unnecessary to go into the question of domicile, and the Court held that under sub-section D of section 3, the applicant was exempted from deportation.

Dr. Greer asked for costs in the case. His client had done all in his power to give the Immigration Officer every chance of inspecting his papers, etc.

Maasdorp, J., said that, as he had said in another case, the Court would not readily grant costs against the authorities when they were doing their duty. It certainly appeared that there were circumstances in this case to mislead the Immigration Officer, and he did not blame the Immigration Officer for having arrived at the conclusion he had. The application for costs would be refused.

Ex parte LIQUIDATORS, BEIRA COLD STORAGE CO.

Mr. Burton moved for leave to appeal from the judgment of the Supreme Court to the Privy Council.
Granted.

BRADLEY AND CRAVEN V. RANE.

Mr. Burton moved for leave to substitute the name of Mr. Nathan or Mr. Charles de Villiers, in place of that of Mr. Saul Solomon, on a commission sitting in Johannesburg.
Granted.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

CAPE TOWN RATEPAYERS' ASSOCIATION AND OTHERS V. CAPE TOWN TOWN COUNCIL. { 1905.
Dec. 18th.

Municipal Council—Administrative acts — Interdict — Illegality—Ultra vires.

The Supreme Court will not, by interdict, interfere with the administrative acts of any Municipal Council unless such acts are ultra vires or otherwise illegal.

This was an application on behalf of the Cape Town Ratepayers' Association and others, calling on the City Council to show cause why the rule nisi, interdicting them from signing the Nuttall contract, should not be made absolute.

Mr. Upington appeared for the petitioners, and Mr. Searle represented the City Council.

Mr. Upington said this was a matter which was specially set down for hearing for to-day, but it had been very difficult for the petitioners to get their case properly together in the time at their disposal. He had an affidavit from the attorney for the petitioners.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The case must be heard to-day.]

Mr. Upington explained that this was an application to have a certain rule nisi which was granted by the Acting Chief Justice made absolute. The rule nisi was returnable on the 12th January, 1906, and called on the respondents to show why they should not be interdicted from signing a certain contract—the Nuttall contract.

De Villiers, C.J., said he had read the petition and the affidavits of the petitioners and the respondents.

Mr. Upington: There are certain replying affidavits which have only been sworn to this morning. I do not know if copies have been received on the other side.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You had better read them.]

Counsel then read the affidavit of Dr. Caporn, which was as follows:

1. That I was present at the meeting of ratepayers held to authorise a loan of £366,000 for the paving of certain streets.

2. That I agree with and confirm the statements of the Mayor, and of John Bartlett, late member of the Town Council.

3. That at the said meeting I asked the chairman (then the Mayor), whether all the streets would be paved in accordance with a schedule then produced, and in particular whether Jordaan, Buiten, and Orphan streets, for which a sum of £6,017 was set apart in the said schedule, would be so paved, and the answer was in the affirmative, and was specially emphatic on the point.

4. The said statement was corroborated both by Mr. Councillor Matthews, the then chairman of the Public Works and Improvements Committee, and by the then City Engineer, Mr. Wynne Roberts, who produced the said schedule for my inspection and satisfaction.

5. Had the answer been otherwise, I should not have voted for the loan in question, as then the Council would have been at liberty to devote all the money to one particular part of the city, instead of distributing it uniformly, with the consequent benefit to all ratepayers.

The affidavit of Mr. John Bartlett, builder, of Cape Town, was as follows:

1. That I was a member of the Town Council of Cape Town for about five years, and that at the date on which the ratepayers were asked to sanction a loan of £366,000 for the improvement of adopted streets, I was then a Councillor.

2. That at a meeting of ratepayers called on that date for the purpose of sanctioning the said loan, I was present, and in company with Councillors Liberman and Matthews (chairman of the Streets Committee) and other Councillors, represented the Town Council.

3. At that meeting a schedule of all streets to be paved, drawn up by the City Engineer, was placed before the meeting, and the said schedule set forth in detail the exact sum to be spent on each particular street.

4. It was distinctly understood by the ratepayers present at that meeting that the Town Council would, if the said loan were sanctioned, be bound to spend, if necessary, on each street the amount set apart for that particular street in the schedules referred to.

5. This was a fact upon which great stress was laid by the other Councillors and myself, and we, as Councillors, depended on the said schedules, as submitted to the meeting in question, and on the promise that the money would be so spent, to get the said loan sanctioned by the ratepayers.

6. Owing to the fact that on several occasions prior to the said date various sums authorised by the ratepayers for certain purposes had subsequently been diverted by the Council to other uses than those understood by ratepayers, there was a very considerable amount of dissatisfaction among the ratepayers, and, accordingly, the understanding that the money was to be spent as per schedule was very explicit.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What was the form of the resolution passed at that meeting?]

Mr. Upington: It was not a resolution exactly, but a poll.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What was the form of the meeting?]

Mr. Upington read the notice convening the meeting of ratepayers, and explained that before the meeting was held, a schedule was submitted to the ratepayers personally, and a poll was demanded, and a schedule was published, which lay at the office of the Town Clerk for the inspection of the ratepayers.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is your contention, then, that the laying of the schedule before the ratepayers prevents the Town Council from paying a penny more than is on the schedule?]

I cannot go that length, but I say they are not entitled, having named certain streets to the ratepayers to leave these streets without being done.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The question is, are they spending more than they ought to, on any particular streets?]

That will be mentioned when the Court is asked to say how much has been expended out of the £366,000, and how much is to be spent.

Counsel then read the affidavit of John B. Wheelwright, member of the Corporation of Accountants, Fellow of the Chartered Institute of Secretaries, at one time Treasurer and Town Clerk of Woodstock, presently carrying on business as an accountant in Cape Town, and Henry Rowe Rowe, member of the South African Society of Architects, carrying on business in Cape Town as an architect and quantity surveyor. It was as follows:

1. That, acting upon instructions from the respondents' attorney, we made certain investigation at the Town-House in reference to the matters dealt with in the original petition, and that the result of our investigations is as follows:

2. We append hereto a report signed jointly, dealing with the loan of £366,000 authorised by the ratepayers in July, 1901, for the purposes of paving certain adopted streets in Cape Town, and that the facts and deductions contained therein are to the best of our knowledge and belief true and correct in every respect.

3. That we hold, as a result of our investigations, that there is not at the present moment a sufficient balance of the said original capital sum available for the purposes of the contract which it is proposed to enter into with Messrs. Nuttall and Co.

4. That the appellation "adopted streets" refers to streets which at the date of the passing of the Municipal Act of 1893 had already been taken over, and were being maintained at the cost of the municipality.

5. With reference to the appellation "unadopted streets," these were streets existing at the time of the passing of the said Municipal Act, but which had not been formally taken over by the municipality, and for the maintenance of which the municipality were not responsible.

6. The term "new streets" refers to streets which have been or may be constructed subsequently to the date of the passing of the said Municipal Act.

7. That your deponents append hereto an abstract of the municipal accounts for the year 1904.

8. That on page 94 of the said abstract, under the expenditure in connection with unadopted streets loan, the flotation expenses are charged as an item against the same, and your deponents allege that this is a proper course to pursue in such cases.

9. That no such item has been charged against the capital sum of £366,000 which was borrowed for the making up of adopted streets.

10. That another item which has not been charged against this loan is that of the percentage for departmental provision, and its expenditure in connection therewith, and your deponents are informed by the City Treasurer that the usual charge in this respect is one of 3 per cent. on the amount of the expenditure.

11. That in the case of other loans by the Municipality of Cape Town, these items for departmental provision and for flotation expenses, are, as will appear from the abstract of accounts referred to, customarily charged.

12. That with reference to the statement by Cunningham in a replying affidavit of the respondents, to the effect that £2 will cover all extras, we desire to point out that the average sum expended on extras in similar contracts, both with Nuttall and Co. and other firms, amounts to about 12½ per cent. of the capital sum in each case.

13. I, the said Henry Rowe Rowe, state that in reference to paragraph 27 of the said Cunningham's affidavit as to the extra excavation required in order to bring St. George's-street to a proper level, that the cost of the same, together with the expenses of removal, will cost at least £500.

14. That with reference to the statement in paragraph 5 of C. B. Martin's affidavit, to the effect that the Council has authority to expend upon works for which a loan has been authorised by the ratepayers, such additional sum over and beyond the amount so authorised any additional sum required to complete such works, we deny emphatically that such is the case.

15. That in corroboration of our statement, we beg to refer the Court to page 101 of the said abstract of the City Treasurer's accounts, from which will be seen the various sums required for the building of the new City Hall.

16. That the original estimate for the City Hall was £50,000, and authority was obtained from the ratepayers for this amount, in the usual manner, on the 19th November, 1891.

17. Subsequently it was found that more money would be required to build the City Hall, and accordingly on the 4th July, 1901, the ratepayers were again applied to, and sanctioned a further sum of £100,000.

18. Accordingly, the statements contained in paragraphs 6 and 7 of the said Martin's affidavit, to the effect that it has at all times been the practice of the Town Council to complete a contract for which an insufficient amount has been sanctioned by the ratepayers from moneys taken out of revenue or otherwise, is utterly inaccurate.

19. That as a result of our investigations as detailed in our report, we find that the balance available for the contract in question does not exceed £58,479.

20. That the time at our disposal for the investigation of the books and accounts necessary to be gone into by us in order to frame this report was so limited that we are unable to state that this amount might even have to be still considerably decreased, on account of the omission by us of the minor streets as stated above, which we have not had the necessary time to go into.

21. That the particulars upon which our report is based were taken from the original schedule presently in the possession of the City Treasurer, and which schedule was exhibited at the meeting of ratepayers at which the poll was instructed to be taken.

22. That the schedule presented at the said meeting, specified in detail the amount to be spent on each street, and upon the understanding that each amount would be so spent on each particular street, the ratepayers passed the said loan.

23. That deponents desire to point out that in the statement by Thorpe, the Acting Treasurer during Mr. Martin's absence, the said Thorpe takes the same view as your deponents and admits that the sum of £97,843 was specially authorised by the ratepayers for the paving of the six streets in question.

24. That your deponents desire to express their regret that owing to the lack of time at their disposal, and owing to the involved nature of the investigations they have not been able to place as full and detailed a report before this Court as they would otherwise have done.

The following is the report referred to:

The original estimate was £425,000; from this deduct £59,000. Total, £366,000. This was the amount the ratepayers were asked to grant, as £20,000 had been granted on a separate loan for paving and £39,770 previously, put down for Dock-road was withdrawn.

The method by which the deduction of £20,000 is dealt with is apparently by transferring the £10,000 of Section 4 for lanes (or the greater part thereof) to the unadopted streets account and striking out contingencies £9,144, leaving balance of £405,856 on original estimates. From this deduct the £39,770, leaving £366,086 and the ratepayers were asked to sanction a loan of £366,000, which was granted.

Section 1.—Streets requiring immediate attention, £227,880; less deduction for Dock-road, £39,770—Total, £188,110.

Section 2.—Streets requiring attention within five years, £140,058.

Section 3.—Streets not urgent, £37,869—Total, £366,037.

The loan, therefore, provides for the streets in the three sections, excepting the small amount of £37, but there is no allowance for contingencies whatever.

For the six streets it is now proposed to pave at a cost of some £100,000, the following amounts were placed, viz., Long-street, £30,215; Plein-street, £9,150; Darling-street, £13,243; Adderley-street, £26,441; St. George's-street, £11,062; Parliament-street, £7,723—Total, £97,834. But of this has already been expended the following amounts to 31-10-05:

Long-street, £2,081 16s. 8d.; Plein-street, £2,799 1s. 3d.; Darling-street, £1,805 1s. 5d.; Adderley-street, £4,281 8s. 10d.; St. George's-street, £2,678 11s. 6d.; Parliament-street, £285 6s. 10d.—Total, £13,931 6s. 6d.

Therefore, unless the other streets to be provided for are to be robbed, or unless they have all been completed and at considerably under estimated cost, only £83,902 13s. 6d. was available for these streets on October 31 last, since when amounts have been spent which would further reduce this balance. These amounts, however, have not yet passed through the City Treasurer's books. According to the books of the council, the position of the £366,000 is as follows: Expended to 31st October, 1905 (accurate), £238,380 13s.; expended to 31st November (not yet finally verified), £5,304 7s. 9d.; total, £243,685 0s. 9d.

Add for transfer from unadopted to adopted account, information supplied by City Treasurer, not yet passed through books, £2,363 5s. 4d.

Retained money which has to be paid to Nuttall for work already done (the total retention money is some £8,477 18s. 4d., of which one-fourth may fairly be accounted as on adopted streets), £2,119 9s. 7d.; total, £248,167 15s. 8d.

Thus only leaving £117,833 available for the completion of all the unfinished streets, and also providing funds for the large proposed paving contract, which it is admitted, will not cost less than £100,000. That a very large amount of work still remains to be done is very obvious, as a rapid inspection shows 13 streets, estimated to cost £3,359, not touched; two streets, estimated to cost £428, only had under £1 each spent on them. Beach-road, estimated to cost £10,846, remains unfinished, having so far only had £3,173 spent on it; and Platteklip-road, which was (including culverting sluic) estimated to cost £5,093, has only had £2 spent on it.

In section 1 of streets requiring in 1901 immediate attention according to the estimates, eight important streets, for which £26,996 was authorised, have only been partially attended to, and only £10,132 has been expended thereon up to 31st October, 1903.

In section 2 of streets requiring attention within five years from 1901, there are 13 important streets, for which £42,378 was authorised, and which remain uncompleted, with only £20,579 spent on them.

In section 3, as the streets are declared not immediately in need of attention, I would only refer to three streets, for which £6,966 is authorised, and only £2,825 spent. Of those streets, the contractors have been called upon to deal with two, so the work is apparently requisite, and streets in this section cannot be hung up indefinitely.

So far, therefore, from the £117,833 previously shown being available for the new paving contract, the following deductions have to be made to provide for the other work for which the loan was granted: For 13 streets not touched, £3,359; for two streets practically untouched, £426; Beach-road to complete, £7,674; Platteklip-road, £5,091; section 1, to complete eight streets, £16,864; section 2, to complete 13 streets, £21,799; section 3, to complete three streets, £4,141; total, £59,354.

Thus, if the estimate of amounts required for the streets to be made under the loan as authorised be anything like accurate, not only will nothing like £100,000 be found available for the next contract, but actually the amount of £83,902 13s. 6d., which stands to the credit of the six streets in question would really be found deficient, owing to over-expenditure in many cases on other streets, as for example: Items of Estimate Exceeded (no amount under £100).—Section 1: Sir Lowry-road, £541; Breda-street, £1,146; Prince-street, £160; Grey's Pass, £278; Park-road, £420; Burg-street, £419; Bouquet-street, £146; Liddle-street, £264; Jordaan-street, £1,338; De Lorentz-street, £554; Schoonder-street, £773; Union-street, £518; Vrede-street, £784; De Villiers-street, £139; Drury-lane, £106; Harrington-street, £348; Primrose street, £105; Stuckeris-street, £2,952; Coburn-street, £100; Courville-street, £103; Jarvis-street, £127; Combrinck-street, £368; Bennet-street, £382; Pontac-street, £757; total, £12,828.

This does not represent the whole amount of estimates' exceeds, as there are many amounts under £100.

In addition to this also, £229 of work has been done on lanes out of the adopted street contract, whereas the item of lanes was transferred to unadopted streets' contract, to which account the other expenditure on lanes, viz., some £6,000, has been debited.

There are other items of expenditure which do not appear to have been put against the loan, and which would render still more hopeless the possibility of finding anything like £100,000 for another contract, namely, the expenses of loan flotation and office and supervision expenses in connection with this work. Loan flotation was some 4 per cent. on the amount of the loan, but has been charged to revenue. (Flotation expenses are charged against unadopted streets' loans, but not against adopted streets' loans.) Supervision and office and departmental expenses must also be added, a further 3 per cent. on work done.

It must therefore be obvious that, unless every other street provided for or meant to be provided for by the ratepayers in granting the loan, be thrown aside in favour of the six streets which it is now proposed to pave, there is not and cannot be anything like £100,000 available for the contract, and if the other streets be completed, the under-estimated amounts and extra work done would absolutely encroach on the £83,902 13s. 6d. at present standing to the credit of these streets, to a very considerable extent.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Supposing certain of the other streets could be done at a less cost, can they not do it?]

Of course, the Town Council will have to reduce the cost of other streets if they pay £85,000 for Adderley-street.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I see there is £100,000 of the loan still left.]

As far as we can ascertain there is £117,833, but our contention is that that amount is not available, because certain streets have to be repaired, according to the schedule submitted to the ratepayers, and there will not be sufficient money to pay this contract after that is done.

Mr. Searle said he had a short affidavit from the Town Clerk in which he pointed out that for several days after the matter was before the Court fixing the date for trial, nothing was done at all by the applicants in the matter.

The affidavit was in the following terms: (1) On Friday, the 16th instant, Mr. J. M. P. Muirhead and Mr. Douglas, accountants, called at my office with the object of seeing certain books relating to the loan transactions of the Town Council for the expenditure of moneys on streets. All the information in my possession and in the possession of the City Treasurer which was asked for was given to them, and a considerable amount of time of the Treasurer and myself was taken up for this purpose. (2) On Saturday, the 16th instant, Mr. J. B. Wheelwright and Mr. Rowe Rowe called for the purpose of obtaining the same information, which was afforded to them again at considerable length by myself and the City Treasurer. (3) The said gentlemen were the only persons who have attended at the City Hall for the purpose of examining the books and accounts of the Council with reference to the Nuttall contract now in question since the rule nisi was granted.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You have applied for the discharge of the order?]

Mr. Searle: We applied on Monday last to the Court to fix a date.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I will hear you.]

Mr. Searle said he would submit that in this matter there was now really no legal ground on which this rule could be confirmed. He took it that the principle was clear that unless the applicants could make out that in some way the Town Council had acted ultra vires, or outside the powers conferred by the Act of Parliament, they could not succeed. The Court could not inquire into matters of administration of the Council, and even matters such as the expediency of the Council in entering into a conflict—

[De Villiers, C.J.: We can take it for granted that the only two tangible points as far as I see are, first, that the contract is not in terms of the tender, and the other seems to be that there is no resolution which authorises this particular expenditure.]

Mr. Searle: With regard to the authorising of the loan, the position I take up is this, that there was nothing which bound the Town Council to spend a particular sum of money on any particular street.

Continuing, counsel contended that the petitioners had not shown that any particular sum of money had been allocated to any particular street so as to bind the Town Council to carry out the repairs on that street to the extent of the sum voted. Sections 104 and 105 provided the law by which these loans could be raised, and it would be seen on reference to the notice calling the meeting that no particular streets were named. The Town Council had not exceeded the total sum provided. The Town Council had certain rating powers under which it could levy a rate of 4d. in the £, and it would be admitted that the rates did not nearly come up to that amount at present. If the Town Council could get money from any other source to carry out its contract there was nothing in the Act to prevent it using the money. If they had any money from the rates they could use it on this work. They had the necessary power to make up the streets, and the reason why they went to the ratepayers was to get the power to enable them to raise the extra amount. The mere fact of their getting this £330,000 did not prevent them using other money for the work. He contended there was nothing in the Act to justify the attitude adopted by the petitioners. The affidavits of the officials, who were all men of experience, were to the effect that there was sufficient money available for this contract and the streets. Counsel contended that the facts alleged by the petitioners were not established.

[De Villiers, C.J.: As to the other points raised by the petition, I would like to hear Mr. Upington.]

Mr. Upington said the position had been considerably simplified since the case last came before the Court, and he was not prepared to support all the positions taken up by the petitioners, but he did contend that there were two grounds on which the Court should grant the interdict sought. The first was that the draft contract which it was proposed to sign differed in an important detail from the tender as accepted by the Council. The tender stated that the party agreed to complete the work in 18 months, and they guaranteed that the paving would carry the traffic for a period of three years, and the tenderers (Messrs. Nuttall) added a memo., in which they undertook to maintain the paving for a further period of three years, depositing with the Council £10,000 in Cape Town Corporation Municipal Stock. The draft contract which it was proposed to sign did not contain the latter portion of the contract. He contended that the guarantee in the letter was in addition to the guarantee embodied in the printed form, and it should be included in the draft contract.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you hold that the contract should mention four and a half years?]

No, the 18 months is for the completion of the contract.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then what point do you raise?]

We say that after the period of maintenance has expired, they, in their letter, undertake to guarantee the pavement for a further period of three years.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What period do you say the contract covers?]

Six years, according to their letter. It would be seen that the tenderers had actually changed the draft contract to that effect.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the period of maintenance? Where is it mentioned?]

Mr. Upington: It is mentioned in the printed document.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Surely that means only three years' guarantee?]

We contend that it is not the same thing to guarantee the maintenance of a thing as to guarantee it as a perfected thing. Counsel (continuing) said the next point was as to whether the Council were justified in undertaking this paving when the streets for which the money had been allocated had not yet been done. He contended that to leave streets that had been mentioned in the schedule would be illegal. If the Council gave a specific answer to a question as to the streets they intended doing, and did not do those streets, they would be acting illegally. The Town Council certainly had the right to levy a rate of fourpence in the £, but that had to be arranged at the beginning of the year, and no amount could be put on the estimates for a year after those estimates had been agreed to. Therefore, if this work was to be paid for out of the rates, it should be ordered to stand over until the estimates for next year came up for consideration. In conclusion, he contended that the petitioners were entitled to have the rule made absolute, and to prevent this contract being signed until the Council could prove that they were authorised to incur this very serious liability without having any funds at their disposal.

De Villiers, C.J.: It appears that the learned Judge, who had heard the previous applications in this case, had a perfectly open mind on the matter, and that he only granted the rule for the purpose of enabling the Town Council to lay before the Court its version of the dispute between the Council and a number of the ratepayers of Cape Town. The question does not come before the Court by way of an appeal, but on the information originally given by the applicants, and the further information given by the Town Council. The one point that is perfectly clear is that the Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with a purely administrative concern of the Town Council. If it were in the power of a minority of councillors who objected to a resolution of the Council to come before this Court and ask it to rescind that resolution this Court would have much more on its hands than it could possibly attend to. The Councillors have presumably been elected by reason of the confidence placed in them by the ratepayers, and it is not the business of this Court to withhold its confidence merely because it might not approve of the administrative conduct of a majority of the Council. The only ground upon which this Court can be asked to interfere is illegality in the conduct of the Council, or any such abuse of its powers as amounts to illegality. It would appear that the decision to accept the tender of Nuttall and Co. was arrived at by the majority of the Council. Subsequently attempts were made to reverse the decision. One member of the Town Council gave notice that he would move to rescind the resolution, but when the time came for his motion to be put he was absent. He explained his absence; he had to go elsewhere. And so the matter did not come on. It was postponed. When it came on again the Town Councillor was not in his place to move his resolution. Therefore, the Town Clerk, one would suppose, as any other Town Clerk would do, gave notice to the tenderers that their tender had been accepted. The tenderers expected to have an answer within a reasonable time. They could not wait till the squabbles of the Town Council were finished. They expected an answer within a reasonable time, and if the Town Clerk had waited until the question had again come on before the Council as to whether this resolution was to be rescinded or not, probably the resolution would not have been brought on up to the present time, and it might even be next year before that member of the Town Council would move his resolution, and in the meanwhile the whole matter would be suspended, the Town Council could not sign the contract, and the tenderer would have to wait. Now, the only question that arises is, was there any illegality in accepting the tender? I fail to see where the illegality was. Then it is said that there is no money to pay for the work, but it appears that the ratepayers had authorised a loan of £366,000 for certain works. The whole of that £366,000 has not been expended, and there is money available for the purpose of the particular work which is now in question. Then it is said that this would necessitate other work which had also been authorised not being carried out. That might be, or it might not be, so; but if that work could not be carried out, then probably the Council would have to levy a rate for the purpose. The Town Council has had specific authority from the ratepayers to raise a sum of £366,000 (which should be expended upon certain works), and until the whole of that amount has been expended, or until so much has been expended as would not leave a sufficient sum of £85,000 for the purpose of this contract, it is impossible for the Court to say that the Town Council has acted ultra vires. This application, therefore, seems to me to rest upon no foundation whatever. Then comes the further point whether the contract which the Town Council intended to sign was in conformity with the form of the tender. Well, the form of the tender must be read by the light of the notice given by the Town Council inviting tenders, and in that notice it was said: "If the party tendering was prepared to guarantee that the pavement would carry the traffic and remain in condition for a number of years—the period to be specified." But in the tender itself, which was annexed to this printed form, nothing was said about the guarantee. There was simply a tender to do this work within a certain time, and to have it completed within 18 months. Then there was a letter which accompanied the tender, and which stated that the paving was not in any way an experiment, and to show their confidence in it they were prepared to maintain it for a period of three years, without charge, and to leave as security £10,000 on Cape Town Corporation Municipal stock, the interest to accrue to them. The contract somewhat expanded the tender, and a substantial sum was offered to be deposited with the Corporation as a guarantee, not only for the satisfactory maintenance for a term of three years, but as a further guarantee for the efficiency of the pavement. Here, there is an absolute guarantee for the efficiency of the pavement. No doubt there are other reasons why the efficiency would have to be decided soon, because the Town Clerk would have to give his certificate, and he could not withhold that for an indefinite time. After a careful reading of the tender, and the notice calling for the tender, and the contract which was tendered. I am unable to say that there is such a discrepancy between the contract and the tender as to justify the Court in making the rule absolute. For those reasons I think that the rule already granted should be discharged, with costs.

[Applicants' Attorney: A. J. McCallum. Respondents': Fairbridge, Arderne, and Lawton.]

Ex parte DUSSEAU'S ESTATE, LIQUIDATORS OF.

Mr. Douglas Buchanan moved, on behalf of the liquidators in the estate of Valentin Dusseau, for an order calling on the respondent Hartman to show cause, on January 12, why leave should not be granted to issue a writ of execution on his goods and chattels to satisfy a debt of £50 on certain shares in the liquidated company.

Dr. Greer (for the respondent) pointed out that the respondent was out of the Colony, and it was not known when he would return. It was quite clear that he was liable for the money, but the question was, whether his property should be attached or should the liquidators be forced to wait for a certain time?

De Villiers, C.J., granted the order as prayed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

GOW V. DILIZANE AND OTHERS. { 1905.
Dec. 19th.

This was an application to have a certain rule nisi made absolute.

The rule nisi had been granted on the 9th November calling on the respondents to show cause why an interdict preventing them from interfering with the applicants' use of the A.M.E. Church at West London should not be granted. It appeared that the former pastor of the church, the Rev. Spaun, was expelled, and the Rev. Morrison appointed in his place.

The respondents, as stewards of the church, refused to recognise the Rev. Morrison or to hand over the keys of the church. The applicant alleged that he was duly appointed Superintendent-General to the A.M.E. Church, and when he went down to West London for the purpose of inducting the Rev. Morrison, the respondents refused him access to the church. Mr. Burton now appeared to show cause, and read an affidavit which set out there was no such office as that of general superintendent, and that office had been illegally created for the applicant at a wrongly-instituted conference. Neither the Bishops nor a general conference had any right over the church property. According to the A.M.E. Church discipline the legal trustees of each church were responsible for the management of all the temporal concerns of the church property, which was vested in the board of trustees of the A.M.E. Church in America, and that board alone could obtain an order for the handing over of the church. The property was not under the jurisdiction of the Cape Colony Conference.

It was denied that the Rev. Spaun was expelled by a properly constituted conference, and the respondents held that he was still their duly appointed pastor. The property was registered in the name of the A.M.E. Church, and no persons were mentioned.

Mr. P. S. T. Jones was for the applicant and Mr. Burton appeared for the respondents.

Maasdorp, J.: The ordinary process of the Court by means of which property can be recovered is by way of action. Sometimes in cases of emergency or where matters of fact are not in dispute, the Court will deal with the matter by way of motion, and an interdict is granted where a clear right has been established.

In this case the church in question belongs, according to the Registry of Deeds, to the African Methodist Episcopal Church, and it is clear that there is no one now before the Court who holds any special authority from that body to appear before the Court and assert these rights. That church was represented by the Bishop before he left. The Bishop has gone to America, and in his absence he left the keys in the hands of persons called trustees. The only persons who are now in the Colony who represent the interest of the parties are the trustees on the one hand and the applicant, who claims to have been duly appointed a minister of the church,

The dispute between them as to who is entitled to the key should be readily settled by reference to headquarters, and that would be the proper way to settle it, instead of going in for litigation. The trustees were in quiet possession of the key, which represents the possession of the church, and the application which was made by a person who seemed to have undoubtedly authority as minister appeared to be one of urgency. It now appears that his authority is disputed, and under the circumstances the Court would not perhaps in the first instance have granted this interdict if it had appeared that there was a matter of serious dispute between the parties. Under the circumstances, the parties must be put back into the position they occupied before the rule nisi was granted.

The rule will be discharged and the question of costs can stand over.

M McNALLY V. ESTATE WIGGETT.

Preferent claim—Last illness.

This was an application on notice of motion, calling on the trustee in the estate of the late Matthew Wiggett to show cause why a certain proof of debt of £130, tendered on behalf of the applicant, and accepted by the R.M. of Mossel Bay at a second meeting of creditors in the estate, should not rank as preferent.

The applicant, who is a medical practitioner, set out in an affidavit that from August, 1903, to July, 1904, he rendered professional services to the deceased during his last illness. Accounts were rendered, and supplied during the deceased's last illness. When he made the affidavit he did not know his claim was preferent, and that was why he omitted to mention that accounts had been rendered during the lifetime of the deceased.

A replying affidavit was put in denying that Wiggett was ill from August, 1903, to July, 1904. In October the deceased was sufficiently recovered to be able to attend his own business, and was plaintiff in a case and attended the Court.

Mr. Burton, for applicant. Mr. Bisset, for respondent.

Maasdorp, J., said it was impossible to give a general description or definition of what a last illness might be, it would certainly depend on the circumstances of each case. To his mind it was the intention of the law to protect as far as possible the medical practitioner, who might be called in during the last sufferings of a man, and there might be circumstances which would prevent him from asking for his fee until the decease of that patient. It might often happen that a medical man would not in the last illness of a patient trouble him with his account, but the present case was of a different nature. It seemed that the patient had been suffering from a chronic complaint for some years, and during that time he was often able to attend to his business. There seemed to be no reason why during the course of that period the doctor did not ask for his fees. He did not think that his suffering from a chronic complaint could be regarded as the last illness within the meaning of the law. They found that the widow of the deceased had made an affidavit in which she stated her husband was quite able at times to do his work, although not quite well, and consequently he was well enough to attend to the payment of his doctor's bills. The Court would give an order for the payment of £4, the amount incurred from the time he last went to bed before his death.

COATES AND COTTRELL V. ST. JOHN'S BENEFIT SOCIETY.

This was an application by Joseph John Wates and Lewis Cottrell, for an interdict restraining the secretary or any other member of the St. John's Benefit Society paying out of the funds of the society any money for a purpose contemplated by a resolution pending an action to be instituted.

The applicants' petition stated that they were members of the society, which had for its object the raising of funds by entrance fees, subscriptions, fees, fines, etc., for various benefit purposes. At a meeting of the members of the society in December last, it was resolved by the majority of members (several remaining neutral), that the charter of the Lodge of Scotland should be returned to Scotland, and that the society in the meantime work under the Free Gardeners' Rules locally as the St. John's Benefit Society, pending a final decision, a minority of eight voted against it, amongst whom were the petitioners. At a subsequent meeting held in September last, it was agreed by a majority of members that the society in future work under the charter of England, and that the sum of £10 be paid out of the funds of the society for the purpose of paying the expenses of initiating 12 of the members into the British Order of Free Gardeners. Petitioners lodged an objection to the diversion and misappropriation of the sum from the funds of the society for an object not contemplated by the rules or by members who had originally contributed to the society; wherefore petitioners prayed that the Court would grant an order declaring the resolution void, and grant an interdict as prayed.

Mr. W. P. Buchanan appeared for petitioners and Mr. De Villiers for respondents.

Maasdorp, J., said that if this money was appropriated by anybody for an illegal purpose, it could be recovered. Why should the Court interfere with the administration of the society.

Mr. Buchanan: What they intend to do is to change the lodge from what it is to one of a different charter. We say amongst other things that they cannot do that without their changing our contract without consent. We do not want to go into the charter.

[Maasdorp, J.: Can't you resign?]

We have made certain payments up to date, and we have certain vested interests. We would resign if they would pay us out.

[Maasdorp, J.: Have you any authority for a Court interfering with a society of this kind. It is not a partnership or a company.]

That is the reason why all the members must agree.]

[Maasdorp, J.: But the Court cannot interfere with the society in what they do at these meetings.]

An application is very often made under the company law for an injunction.

[Maasdorp, J.: But they have their registered legal rights.]

But we also have an act dealing with these friendly societies. This society has not been registered under the Friendly Society Act.

[Maasdorp, J.: Then how can the Court deal with it?]

Because it is the only body we can come to. The society is a body, and they seek to change the whole constitution of the society: to which we object.

[Maasdorp, J.: How can the Court give orders as to the rules they have made? The Court will want a good deal more information before it can decide this matter. They have decided to act under another charter, and the Court will have to go into that charter. You cannot proceed on motion.]

But there must be some remedy?

Maasdorp, J.: The case had better stand over until February, and in the meantime the society had better try and adjust their differences, or, if not, decide whether an action is necessary.

HAES AND CO. V. MCINTOSH AND STEWART.

This was an application on notice of motion for the release of certain goods for attachment.

The affidavit of Joseph Frederick Warren, general representative in South Africa of the plaintiff firm, stated that about September 12, Mr. Haydn Cooke, of Cape Town, entered the employ of his firm as a traveller. On that date he forwarded to Cooke from Johannesburg seven cases of samples for him to use on the firm's business in Cape Town. About November 29 he found that the samples had been attached by the Deputy-Sheriff, on the application of the respondents against Cooke. The plaintiff firm were not responsible for the personal liabilities of Cooke.

The affidavit of Alexander McIntosh stated that his firm were local shipping and clearing agents for Messrs. Branch and Co., manufacturers of the "Beehive" boot, and had cleared Customs dues on all boots and samples of boots consigned to W. Haydn Cooke, local agent and traveller for Messrs. Branch and Son. Cooke had had a running account with witness's firm for clearing charges. Between November, 1904, and October, 1905, the respondent firm cleared a quantity of samples of "Beehive" boots, consigned to Cooke. In November last Cooke took an office in Cape Town, and put his name outside the door. Respondents were informed that Cooke had left Cape Town for Australia, and they applied for an order restraining the removal of any goods, which was granted.

A replying affidavit by Warren stated that, when Cooke entered his firm's employ, his firm, by arrangement with Messrs. Branch, purchased from them all their samples then in possession of Cooke, and which consisted solely of Beehive boots. The samples were left with Cooke. Applicants submitted that respondents had no lien on any of the samples.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for applicant, and Mr. Lewis for the respondent.

Maasdorp, J., made an order for all the property, except the Beehive boots, to be released from the attachment, with leave to the applicants to proceed by action to recover the Beehive boots. The question of costs to stand over.

WILMOT V. WALTER.

Mr. Jones moved on behalf of Fred. Wm. Baynes Wilmot for an order for personal attachment against John Orlando Walter, for failing to comply with the terms of an order of Court.

Mr. Burton opposed the application. The applicant's affidavit stated that an order of the Court had been issued ordering the respondent to allow the applicant access to all the books, title-deeds, etc., in his possession, relating to the insolvent estate of Thomas Dicker, and that he had ignored the same, and had continually put applicant off from day to day with regard to completing the account.

The respondent stated in his affidavit that owing to illness he was unable to oppose the original motion. The applicant had always had access to the papers in the estate; that the applicant had received £400 out of the sale of the immovable property, and had not placed the money to the credit of the insolvent estate in the Standard Bank, and had repeatedly refused to pay out to one Abraham Wentzel, a preferent creditor in the estate.

Mr. Jones said he would withdraw the application for personal attachment, but would press for costs.

Maasdorp, J., said it seemed to him that the respondent had raised matters in this application which had already been disposed of by the Court. He stated in his affidavit that the applicant had always had access to the books and papers, but the Court found it necessary to grant an order that access should be granted. He said he was not present to oppose the first application, as he was ill. Whether he was ill or not, he could have obtained assistance. In many respects, the affidavit of the respondent did not answer the matters contained in the applicant's affidavit, who alleged that ever since the order was granted he was unable to obtain access to the books, and that it was only after the personal notice of motion was given, that the order was obeyed. As far as it appeared, the only question before the Court was that of costs, and under the circumstances, the respondent would have to pay the costs of the motion.

Ex parte BOYCE.

Dr. Greer moved as a matter of urgency for leave to raise a bond of £750, the purchase price of a property bought by applicant for his minor daughter in Sterling-street, Cape Town.

The matter was referred to the Master for his report.

SUPREME COURT

IN CHAMBERS.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN.]

REX V. TROMP. { 1905.
Dec. 29th.

Bail—Charge of murder.

Where a person charged with murder applied for bail, and the Crown opposed the application, the Court refused to grant bail, but gave leave to renew the application after the accused should have been committed for trial.

Mr. Burton applied on behalf of Petrus Nicholas Tromp, a farmer, of the Calvinia district, for an order of release from imprisonment on bail. The accused, it appeared, was arrested on a charge of murdering a shepherd in his employ, named Jan Tys, near Middelpost, and was at present confined in the Calvinia gaol. Counsel related the evidence of the preliminary examination, which, he said, was purely circumstantial, and he pointed out that while the accused was detained his stock was suffering, as there was only his wife and a boy to attend to it.

Mr. Nightingale, who appeared for the Crown, said that the Attorney-General could not consent at present, as further investigations were being made.

Buchanan, J., said that under the circumstances no order would be made at present. The application could be renewed after the final commitment.

Held on appeal from the Court of Review, that as the company's share of the profits made by the syndicate was derived from diamonds found in this Colony, Sec. 42 of Act 36 of 1904 was wide enough to cover this, and that it was, therefore, subject to income tax.		In 1901, C. & Co. agreed to support M. & Co., on the latter firm passing a general covering bond in their favour. P. F. had hired certain wagons and oxen from P. and others, with the object of sub-letting them to the Military. He took them up to the front and handed them over to the Military on certain terms. He was afterwards succeeded by his brother F. F. as conductor. P. F. was duly paid for their use, and in turn settled with P. and others. After some months the wagons, &c., were discharged by the Military. F. F. and P. F. failed to return them to their owners, as they held that their responsibility for them ceased on their discharge. P. subsequently sued F. F. and P. F. in the Magistrate's Court for their return, or their value, and for damages for illegal detention. P. aries, to which all persons who settled on the land were required to assent. These rules were read to the people from time to time, but were not printed for many years. In 1881, these rules (with a few unimportant modifications) were printed and circulated. The rules provided, inter alia, that any erf holder on the station could be ejected from his holding on a month's notice subject to his right on a fixed scale of compensation for his improvements. Three of the defendants who had persisted in breaking certain rules of the station received such notice, but refused to comply therewith. Other two had received no such notice but had transgressed the rules by refusal to pay rent, on the ground that they had a quasi proprietary right in their holdings. The Society now claimed a declaration of rights as against the defendants, an order of ejectment and arrears of rent from those who had refused to pay, tendering at the same time compensation for improvements as fixed by the rules.
Held (1) that the rules, as printed, formed the basis of the contract between the Missionaries and the people; (2) that the Society was, therefore, entitled to an order of ejectment against the defendants; (3) that the defendants were entitled to compensation for their improvements, such compensation to be subject to set-off for rent due, or other legal liabilities.

The appellants, Europeans, had been ejected from a certain native reserve on a Magistrate's order granted against them after criminal proceedings had been taken. Held that, upon proof by the plaintiff in an action against the defendant for a refund of the price, that as the cattle had been stolen and that as the defendant would have had no valid defence to a suit at the instance of M., the plaintiff was entitled to succeed, although there had been no judicial eviction.		Held, that the cottage and grounds so occupied were liable to be rated under Acts 36 of 1891 and 19 of 1892.

Review—Gross irregularity—Adjournment of Resident Magistrate's Court. In an action to recover certain sheep or their value in a Transkeian Magistrate's Court, it appeared that the plaintiff was too old and infirm to attend, and, on the application of the plaintiff's agent, the Magistrate adjourned the hearing to the plaintiff's residence, which was in the same district, for the sole purpose of taking his evidence. Due notice of the time and place was given to the defendant, but he refused to appear either at the plaintiff's residence or at the subsequent hearing in the Courtroom, of which he also had notice. There was evidence without that of the plaintiff to justify the defendant being called upon to produce his evidence, but he tendered none. Held, that upon the attachment of the furniture in execution of a judgment obtained by a creditor against the lessee, the claimant was not entitled to claim the furniture as being his own property.		One B. purchased certain timber from defendants on credit, subject to the condition that this timber was to be used for the purpose of building a boat, and that when that boat was completed it should be the property of the defendants and should remain so until the timber was paid for. B. was allowed in the meantime to sell the boat through defendants, on condition that he should pay over the price received to them. B. sold the boat to plaintiff who, bona fide, bought it as B.'s property. B. appropriated the proceeds and absconded. Pinkus v. Fenster	123	Held, that as this was not a case of a sale under a suspensive condition, the Court was not called upon to decide whether a sale of raw materials, subject to that condition, would vest the dominium of the finished article in the vendor or not.

In an action for specific performance and the delivery of the shares, the defendant company alleged misrepresentation on the part of the vendors, but at the trial failed to establish this defence. Judgment was given for the delivery of the shares, or in the alternative for the payment of damages equal to their full value. Water Act, 1899—Functions of Water Court—Prescription.
In an application to a Water Court for the distribution of a stream under the 11th section of Act 40 of 1899, it was pleaded that the stream was a perennial one as far as it flowed over the respondent's land, but that they, being upper proprietors, had for upwards of thirty years continuously diverted all the water so as not to allow any to flow to the applicant's land. Evidence was taken in support of the plea, and the application was dismissed.
Held on appeal, that the Water Court was right in taking the evidence, and as the weight of the evidence supported the plea, the appeal was dismissed.

Will — Codicil — Construction — Bequest by implication.
A testator, by codicil to his will, bequeathed a farm to his grandson A., "upon this under- standing that he shall not be able to sell the farm, but that after his death and that of his wife it shall devolve upon his eldest son." A. married his first wife after the testator's death, and after her death he was twice married. Upon the death of A., the plaintiff, being his eldest son by his first wife, took possession of the farm.

Held, in an action by A.'s widow, being his third wife, claiming a life interest in the farm, that the wife referred to in the codicil was the mother of the eldest son of A., and that the defendant, as such eldest son, was entitled to the farm after the death of his father and mother.

Kruger v. Kruger ... 316

Will—Fidei commissum—Grandchildren — Renunciation of fiduciary interest.

V. instituted his seven children and their children, by representation, as his heirs, but burdened the inheritance with a life interest in favour of his wife. V. having died, his widow now wished to renounce her life interest in favour of the fidei commissarii.

Held, that as it had been ascertained that no further grandchildren of V. could be born, the portions of the heirs should at once be paid out, notwithstanding the fact that V.'s widow had power to impose further fidei commissa. It was, however, ordered that the shares of the minor heirs were to be paid to the executor for their behoof.

Van Reenen v. Estate Vink 324

Will—Construction—Failure of conditional legacy—Impossibility of performance of condition—Adiation—Family arrangement—Authorization nunc pro tunc.

A husband and wife, married in community, owned certain farms, over 16,000 morgen in extent, in a contiguous block. By a joint will made in 1860, they divided the land into two nearly equal portions, and bequeathed the more valuable half to their eldest son M. for his life, at the price of 10s. per morgen, with strict prohibition against bonding or in any way alienating any portion thereof, the said property to pass after M.'s death to his eldest son for his lifetime for 5s. per morgen, and after his death to his brothers in succession, and on the decease of the last of these then to his eldest and other sons in succession, and on the demise of the last of such great-grandsons of the testator, the property was to be sold, but only among the direct male descendants of the testator, and the money divided among the descendants of M. per stirpes. They bequeathed the less valuable half similarly, but at a less price, to three of their other sons and their male descendants with similar restrictions. As to the residuary estate, the survivor and the children were appointed the heirs of the first dying, and the survivor was appointed executor. The testator died in 1869, leaving his widow and eleven children surviving, of whom M. and two others, not immediately concerned in the land, were then majors. The farms had been mortgaged for £5,100 by the testator in his lifetime, and these mortgages still subsisted at his death. M. was wholly unable to pay the bequest price of £4,000 for his land, and the other three sons, at that time minors, had no prospect of being able at majority to pay the £2,000 necessary to procure their life estate. The estate, unless the land was realised, was unable to meet its liabilities. The widow thereupon determined in 1870 to take over the land at a fair valuation, and she liquidated the testator's estate on that basis, but never got the sanction of the Court to such an arrangement, nor did she ever get transfer of the land into her own name. She, however, paid out all the heirs of her husband as they came of age, and resided and farmed on the land, treating it in all respects as her sole property. No protests from any quarter were ever made to this family arrangement. The testatrix died in 1904, having made a will, disposing of the land among her sons, but in a different manner to that laid down in the will of 1860. In an action brought by the executors against the executors dative of her husband's estate and against the curator ad litem for a minor grandson of the testator,

Held, that the arrangement made by the widow in 1870, and acquiesced in by all parties since that date, must be held good, and that it should be sanctioned nunc pro tunc; and that transfer of the land should be given to the plaintiffs, so that they might deal with it in terms of the will of the survivor.

Also held, that the widow had not by her conduct adiated or accepted benefits under the joint will, so as to debar her from treating the land in a different manner from that laid down in the joint will.

Ferreira v. Otto (3 Juta, 193) followed.

Executors of Van Breda v. Executors Van Breda and others ... 551

Will—Construction—Children—Child in ventre matris.

The testator bequeathed property to some of his children and to his "grandchildren, issue of his daughter by L., her husband."

PAGE

Held, that the plaintiff, who was a child of the testator's daughter by L., but was born five months and three days after the testator's death, was entitled to share in the bequest.

Will, joint—Fidei Commissum—Insolvency of fiduciary—Rights of minor fidei-commissories.

The late P. and his wife made a mutual will, by which their landed property was bequeathed to their two sons by a fidei-commissary bequest subject to a life interest in favour of the survivor, "in order that he or she may be better enabled to maintain, support and educate our children, &c." After the death of P., his widow married B., and subsequently the estates of B. and his wife were sequestrated. Their trustee claimed the life usufruct of Mrs. B. in the estate of her former husband. The defendants claimed that the words of the will "in order that, &c., amounted to a prohibition against alienation of the usufruct.

Held, that these words only implied an expression of desire on the part of the testators as to the way in which the usufruct should be employed, and that the trustee was entitled to judgment for the same.

Visser v. Baker and others ... 437

Will, joint—Husband and wife—
Massing of joint estate - Confirmation by survivor of joint will.

The testators, being husband and wife, made a joint will, by which the testator instituted as his heirs the testatrix and his children by her, and the testatrix instituted the testator and her children by him, and of a previous marriage, and they directed that the survivor was to remain in full and free possession of the whole of the joint estate. The testator died first, and after him his son William, who left one child, namely, the plaintiff. The testatrix made a will, revoking all former wills, except the joint will.

Held, that even if there was no such massing of the joint estate as to make the joint will binding on the survivor after adiation, the effect of the recognition by the testatrix of the joint will was to shew that she intended by her separate will to treat the joint will as binding and to deal only with her after acquired property, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the share of the joint estate, which would have accrued to her father if he had survived his mother.

Held further, that under the joint will the survivor was entitled to deal with her child's portion as her own, and that it consequently forms part of the property disposed of by her separate will.

Maskew v. Estate Maskew ... 255

Will, joint—Sale intra familiam—Vesting.

S. and his wife made a joint will, whereby they bequeathed their entire estate to the survivor and the children of their marriage as their sole heirs. By a codicil to this will the testators directed that a certain farm in their estate should not fall under the provisions of the will, but should be bequeathed to their five sons for £500; which amount was to be paid after the death of the survivor to the three daughters of the testators. In a special case stated the plaintiffs contended that no portion of the inheritance vested in either of the two minor sons who predeceased the survivor, and that subject to payment, pro rata, of their share of the £500, the plaintiff, through his wife, as a beneficiary under the will, was now entitled to a share in the inheritance of the minor sons deceased. The defendants denied that on the death of the survivor the deceased minors acquired any vested interest in the said farm.

Held, in favour of plaintiff's contention.

Olivier v. Schoombee and others 515

Will, joint—Massing—Debts due to estate.

By a joint will, V. and his wife bequeathed to their daughter A. a life interest in £1,000, with fidei commissum to their other five children and the legitimate issue of these per stirpes. They also bequeathed to these five children certain land, the survivor of the testators to enjoy a life usufruct thereof. After the death of the survivor, each of these heirs was to mortgage his portion for £200 to the said A., the interest to be paid to her half-yearly. The testator and testatrix instituted each other mutually, together with their children, as heirs of the residue of the joint estate. Mrs. V. predeceased her husband, who adiated under the will, and subsequently made a will confirming the bequest of land to his children, but imposing certain conditions not embodied

in the original will. There was a bond on the land bequeathed, and it was contended for the plaintiffs that this represented a debt on the joint estate. The defendants contended that it represented the accumulated debts of the plaintiffs.
Held, that as these debts had been taken over by the testator previous to the death of his wife, the mortgage must be regarded as a burden on the joint estate, and that the legatees were entitled to the farms free of mortgage.
Held further, that a debt incurred in respect of a sum of money paid for stock for one of the sons must be regarded as an asset of the joint estate; and that the executrix must pay costs.

a life usufruct of the whole estate. K. survived his wife and adiated. Thereafter K. sold three erven, part of the joint estate. Plaintiffs now claimed that the sale be declared invalid as to half of the three erven and that defendant be ordered to pay the price of the other half, which they said he had not paid. Or in the alternative that he be ordered to pay the full price of the erven, if the sale could not be set aside, either wholly or in part. The fact of the sale having taken place was disputed, but the Court found, as a fact, that it had gone through. The Court also found that no part of the purchase price had been paid.
The defendant was ordered to pay the full amount of the purchase price (£600): or in the alternative to pay £200, with interest, for half the erven and to re-transfer the remaining half free and unencumbered.
